Our Distasteful Tasks

By
LEONARD A. BARRETT

Many persons think of retirement as days of freedom from work and its subsequent worries, freedom to discard all tasks difficult or undesirable; days in which one may do as fancy directs. This may be a happy retreat for a few persons, but for the majority of persons it would prove irksome and distasteful. We are all born to work and earn our daily bread. The most unhappy person in the world is the one who has nothing to do. The most useless person in the world is the one who has never completed a hard distasteful task. Such a task is self imposed and furnishes a means for pent-up energies that would have no other source of expression. Self-flagellation is a sacred chore and a sure course of personal development. What reward has the man who does only work beloved by him? Each in his own sphere leads to sure achievement, but each man in many spheres assures progress and adventure. Life requires constant action and challenges us to be "jack of all trades." We must often do the thing that is distasteful, if we would do the thing necessary to develop character and enlarge our own contacts.

A great composer of music is said to have shrunk from the daily task of mechanically creating new harmonies. By a determined will, he compelled himself to sit at his desk daily and wait for the inspiration which would set the tones vibrating within his soul. It was not until after months of such struggles that the inspiration came and gave to us through the genius of the composer, one of the world's great symphonies. If the incentive to do a great piece of work fails, wait for it: for it will surely come to the one who labors as he waits.

It is doing the thing we do not want to do that develops strength of character. Courage is made secure in a difficult situation. Storms develop faith and crises call for caution and control. When we make contact with persons whom we do not especially like, it enables us to find our better selves and leave something of that better self with others.

If we share ourselves only with our friends, what reward do we need? If we share ourselves with someone, even undesirable, we demonstrate the principle of kindness expressed by Wordsworth: "The best portion of a man's life is his unremembered acts of kindness and love."

The best cure for the blues is work, whether we feel like it, or not. We discover a solace for sorrow in hard work. And hard work can be an interesting hobby to those who because of idleness are suffering with ennui. Do the thing that seems hardest to do. Tackle the most difficult job. Solve an original problem, if you would renew your zest of living. For the greatest victories are those we win over self: and the most praiseworthy works are those we set ourselves to do with a will. Do not pare the mountain to the plain, but climb it, step by step.

PIE BAKING CHAMP

It must be good or she wouldn't eat it herself. Miss Betty Rine, whose home is at Sturgeon Bay, represented Wisconsin in the National Cherry Pie Baking contest in Chicago, and her culinary effort proved the country's best. Miss Rine vanquished opponents from Indiana, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, New York and Missouri. Miss Rine received a $100 prize and will make a trip to Washington to meet President and Mrs. Roosevelt.
