Fog Is Worst Enemy When Driving At Night

Anyone who has done much driving in fog knows the feeling of helplessness which overcomes one when the thick cottony blanket settles down in dead earnest, and one has many miles to drive. Here are a few facts to remember about fog:

Two-thirds of the normal year's fog occurs during the months of October, November and December, with November being the worst month of the year. Fog is usually much heavier at night than in the daytime. Ordinarily it occurs on several consecutive days so that the driver in most cases should be expecting it.

The driver's first reaction to fog should be to reduce his speed so that he will still be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead. In the daytime, he should have his headlights turned on in the "parking" position, to make his car more readily visible to other drivers.

At night, he should drive with his headlights dimmed or depressed, in order that the roadway immediately ahead of the car will be lighted. If the lights are left in ordinary driving position, the rays will simply be thrown back into the driver's eyes, as the fog is composed of tiny drops of water which act like reflecting mirrors.

Many drivers like to use yellow or amber auxiliary driving lights during fog. Ordinarily these lights should be adjusted rather low so that they sweep the surface of the highway, since their purpose is to illuminate some surface or object by which the driver can guide his vehicle.

DESTINY

By W. E. L. Harbours
(Copyrighted)

Was it destined we should meet;
Childhood's little pattering feet
Down along the shady lane,
Where we wandered oft again?

Pencil, copybook, and rule;
Happy children, off to school;
Childish love, so pure and bright;
No dark clouds to dim the light.

Then at eve I thought of you.
A pure and loving angel true.
Never dreamed in after years
For joy would come such bitter tears.

Oh, the beautiful sunshine rays
In those golden bright school days,
When with happiness we knew
Childhood love so pure and true.

But there is a God who knows
All our sorrow and our woes,
He who maketh blackest night
Also guides the star of right.

Him I'll trust with all of might,
Till we kneel within His sight,
There before the judgment throne
Then to know as we are known.

Mrs. J. H. Beck of the Casson ranch near Holland, has been confined to her bed for several days on account of illness.

Dick and Alton Sowell and Alton Duncan of Kerby, were in Grants Pass today, Thursday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Cook of O'Brien entertained for dinner at Thanksgiving in honor of their son, Ellsworth Cook and wife Frances, from Wenatchee, Washington, who are here visiting. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. I. B. Hearing of Grants Pass, their daughters, Helen and Gertrude, and O. W. Vogue.
