EASTER
 Most representative and unchanged of all children's toys are those of Easter time.

The furry rabbit, as usual, is the most popular of children's Easter toys in 1939. Christmas presents are already broken or forgotten, and their owners eagerly welcome the Easter bunny. Here a worker in a larger eastern toy factory cuts the pattern for a rabbit, which, Easter Sunday morning, delights some happy child.

Quarrelsome Donald Duck is rapidly growing in popularity. Though many other Easter toys are manufactured, the bunny and Donald easily lead in total sales. This particular duck, when completed, may be shipped to any part of the world.

Surrounded by thousands of stuffed toys, this girl is busy dressing a rooster. After workmen have completed manufacture of the toy, it is then dressed and made ready for shipping. Manufactured primarily for smaller children, Easter toys are usually not mechanical.

This workman trims the whiskers on Brer Rabbit, and no one could be more of an authority on the job. Perhaps he is prompted by jealousy to clip them that close. Regardless of the length of his whiskers, Brer Rabbit always finds himself in the arms of some enthusiastic five-year-old on Easter Sunday morning.

"That caps the climax."
 "Doesn't the climax ever go bareheaded, pa?"
