"THE TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN"

For seventy minutes of exciting screen entertainment, chalk up a "must see" for "The Trial of Mary Dugan," which comes Wednesday and Thursday to the Cave City theater.

In the new courtroom melodrama Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer presents the combined talents of two of its most up-and-coming young stars—Robert Young and Laraine Day—and a supporting cast of screen favorites.

In the title role, Miss Day sweeps forward from her smash performances in "Foreign Correspondent" and "The Bad Man." As the bewildered little secretary who must stand trial for her life, she plays the most difficult role of her career and comes off with flying colors. It's her first role since being named the outstanding young actress of 1940 by her fellow-workers in the film colony.

As the inexperienced young lawyer who wins his sweetheart's acquittal, Young turns in another flawless performance. In this film, more than any other, he shows why he is one of the most sought-after actors in Hollywood. He has the knack of acting so smoothly that he appears to be not acting at all.

The picture is based on the Bayard Veiller stage success and deals with a girl who escapes from a reformatory and attempts to start life over in the outside world. She succeeds to the extent of winning the confidence of an employer and the love of a young lawyer. But then fate steps in. She becomes the accused in a sensational murder trial, and her past is revealed. The State has an air-tight case against her. Even her attorney's attempts to defend her are half-hearted. But when her young lawyer sweetheart returns from abroad and finds her on trial, he believes her innocent. He takes over the case himself. Slowly he collects fragments of evidence, and then in a sensational denouement proves that the girl could not have committed the murder and at the same time pins crime on the guilty person.

Interesting Letter From Alfred Mellow

An interesting letter from Alfred Mellow to his parents says to tell Ted Athey that he has been transferred to Camp Clairborne, Louisiana, and went through Arizona, Texas, and New Mexico and so far has found no place like the Illinois valley.

Alfred is in the service battery that serves ammunition and supplies to gun batteries. They will be on maneuvers for nearly two months in the swamps of Louisiana, and these swamps are infested, so Alfred says, with all kinds of snakes, including alligators and also there are a lot of coral snakes, supposed to be the most deadly in the United States.

We fall in at 5 a. m. with complete equipment and then retreat at 5 p. m. and fall in again in dress uniform and be able to pass personal inspection, also our guns must be able to pass inspection too.

Alfred was transferred from Camp Roberts, California late last month, and says there are 35,000 men at his present camp, mostly national guard men, nearly all from Minnesota.

Alfred sends his regards to all his friends in the valley, and outside of the climate in Louisiana, he likes his hitch and is deeply grateful for the chance to help in this national emergency.

The Illinois Valley is to be congratulated on the great demonstration last Saturday and Sunday dedicating the Illinois Valley Airport. It shows what a small community can do when co-operation is a hundred per cent.

We have another great celebration coming, THE MINERS' JAMBOREE

Let's do as good a job with the Jamboree as we did with the Airport Dedication.
