New Poison Oak Killer Showing Good Results

More experience with the use of ammonium sulfamate to kill poison oak indicates that it is the best chemical to use for this purpose under many conditions, but it is not as good for eradicating other kinds of perennial weeds as some of the other chemicals, according to a summary of recent tests issued by Chester Otis, assistant farm crops specialist, and L. E. Harris, associate agronomist, at O. S. C.

The only other chemical that equals ammonium sulfamate in killing power on poison oak is at-lacide. Ammonium sulfamate, a nitrogenous weed killer, has the advantage, however, in that it does not sterilize the soil and even has some fertilizer value. It has fire retardant properties instead of being inflammable, which is one reason for its scarcity on the market. The armed services are using it for these fire retarding properties; nevertheless, more supplies are available now than a year ago.

The experiment station recommends that this material be mixed with water at the rate of one pound of ammonium sulfamate per gallon. This is sprayed on foliage, stems and crowns until the liquid drops freely. The best time for application is in the late summer or early fall.

So far the ammonium sulfamate has not shown up satisfactorily on deep-rooted perennials, such as morning glory, Canada thistle, and whitetop.

Lumber was a California industry two years before that State's famous "gold-rush." Today, most of the gold has been mined-out, but new timber is growing there faster than ever.

THE STAGE COACH has given place to the streamliner. The electric light has snuffed out the soft-beamed candle. Tinkling sleigh bells are drowned in the roar of motor horns. But who will say that Christmas has lost its charm? With Christmas at hand we renew our pledge of devotion to ideals of honest dealing, and express our appreciation of your friendship for us during 1943.

We can't win the war without the navy; our soldier can't win unless our ships deliver; merchant ships can't deliver unless the home front provides. One important convoy job is flashing signals as this youth is doing in the Battle of the Atlantic. Your equally important job is to continue buying War Bonds until victory.
