U. S. Town and Farm Share Achievements Of Victory Fleet

Victory Fleet Day—September 27—is a celebration of enormous importance to residents of town and country areas, the War Shipping Board announced. Millions of Americans — many of whom have never been to sea—have contributed to the success of the nation's maritime achievement.

Ships are made of the materials and labor of the nation's mines, factories and farms, WSA reports. When finished, they carry our troops, to our Allies and to the liberated people of the world the products of farm and factory. Inhabitants of the nation's non-metropolitan areas are entitled to great credit for their achievements in building up the nation's shipping fleet. Important in this contribution is the fact that town and country areas have provided many men to sail these ships.

This year's Victory Fleet Day marks the third anniversary of the wartime merchant fleet and is dedicated to the shipping companies of the United States who have maintained the global lifelines of a nation at war. In 1943, there were 62,000,000 long tons of cargo moved out of the United States. WSA points out that in this great movement of goods to all parts of the earth, despite great handicaps under which shipping companies were forced to operate, there has not been a single failure of shipment for any cause that could be ascribed to the operators, nor has there been an essential cargo left at the dock for lack of shipping space.

In the spring of 1942, the submarine menace was at its height, and caused time-consuming, long and roundabout sailings to avoid the enemy. As the submarine danger was reduced in 1943 and almost eliminated in 1944, an immense flow of goods started to England and the Mediterranean, placing traffic strain on existing port facilities. For many months now there has been maintained a 24 hour average of a sailing every 30 minutes of ships outward bound with the goods of war.
