LETTERS

Los Angeles, Calif.
June 1, 1946

I should like to thank my many friends and neighbors for these beautiful flowers, cards and letters, which I received while in the hospital.

I am doing splendidly and hope to be home to my friends and neighbors, as well as my family, in the next few weeks.

Again I should like to say thanks to them all.

Batting the Breeze

By BARNEY

NOT LONG AGO we were visited by an old friend with whom we had corresponded for years. His letters are always a pleasure to read. They are so gay and bright and chatty that reading them almost gives you the feeling of having had a talk with him. There is never the impression that he has written out of a sense of obligation or merely to get it over with. Nor are his letters short notes which would make you feel as though he was either in a hurry or could think of nothing to say.

During his visit the conversation turned to correspondence, and we complimented him on his letters. "Do tell us," we said, "how you write such interesting letters. They are nearly always rather long—doesn't it take up quite a bit of your time?"

Our friend smiled. "Well," he said, "I don't think I have any rules for letter writing—or, yes, perhaps I do, but they are really very simple. In the first place, I seldom write unless I am in the mood for writing and never when I am tired or discouraged, for it's almost impossible not to have your mood reflected in your letters. Then I sit down and write as though I were talking to the person I am writing to. In that way it is easy to find plenty to write about, and it doesn't take long if your thoughts run ahead of your pen."

"It sounds very easy as you put it," we said, "but how about letters to people you don't particularly care about, who have nothing in common with you and yet insist upon keeping up a correspondence?"

"To tell you the truth," he said, "I feel that anyone who thinks enough of me to write me deserves an answer. You see, one time I was down in the pit of despair—I'd had some very bad breaks and was about to give up. Then I received a letter from a fellow I hadn't seen or heard from for years. It was such a cheery letter that it sort of pulled me together and gave me new hope. I guess now I'm trying to repay on the installment plan."
