THE clock has had the privilege of striking midnight and being the first to announce the arrival of the New Year for only about six centuries. Before that, man measured the hours in several different ways.

Primitive man measured the length of a day by the moving shadows which reflected the sun's daily course across the heavens. The first timepiece was probably a pole and a stone—the pole to cast a shadow and the stone to mark where the shadow fell when the sun was highest.

As man became more accustomed to regulating his activities according to specific intervals of time, he devised the "water-thief," the hourglass, and finally the mechanical clock.

Even the simplest "water-thief" measured time accurately because a regular interval of time passed between the moment it was filled and the moment it became empty—and this interval could be timed by the sun.

The hourglass was better than the "water-thief" because it was cheaper, it would not freeze or spill and it did not require refilling.

Real, mechanically operated clocks were not constructed until the thirteenth century. The word "clock" has been derived from the French "cloche," which means bell, and probably owes its connection with timekeeping to the custom of ringing bells to announce the passing of the hours.

New Year Brings Joy, Hope, Sadness

Superstition and curiosity prompted the Anglo-Saxons to climb upon their roofs as the hour of midnight approached on New Year's Eve—it was believed that something might happen when the New Year burst in and everyone wanted to be in a position to see for himself.

Perhaps more of this "something might happen" superstition has survived than is immediately apparent. Almost everyone dreads the thought of being alone on New Year's Eve; if possible, we gather our families and friends around us in our homes. In a more serious mood, an ever-increasing number of persons attend "Watch" services to greet the New Year in prayer and meditation; and there is a universal resolve to "do better" next year. Gathering in public places, in Times Square—or its counterpart—we make as much noise as possible—presumably because our primitive ancestors utilized noise as an expression of celebration, believing the din would keep evil spirits and influences at a distance.

Joyous New Year Bells. The New Year bells have ceased to toll for the dying year and now welcome the New Year with joyous peals symbolic of the hope with which mankind looks forward to a brighter future and a better world, but the nostalgic strains of Auld Lang Syne have become so intrinsically a part of our New Year's Eve that even the very gayest gatherings would be incomplete without it.

Indeed, we stand before the New Year with mingled sentiments, not wholly unlike the child of Longfellow's sonnet:

"Half willing, half reluctant to be led,
And leave his broken playthings on the floor,
Still gazing at them through the open door
Nor wholly reassured and comforted
By promises of others in their stead,
Which, though more splendid,
may not please him more."

Lamp Eases Earache

A small infrared ray lamp, equipped with a headband and an adjustable buckle to position it, has been developed to relieve earaches and inflammation.

Plastics Are Utilized

For Diverse Purposes

Although generally considered as molded articles, plastics are used in many other ways. The use of resins in coatings illustrates the diversity of plastics applications, as pointed out by D. Van Nostrand company's "The New Plastics."

Coatings range from textile treatments to corrosion-resistant industrial finishes for metals. Their utility is increasing in waterproofing textiles, in producing crush-resistant materials and in improving the abrasion resistance of fabrics. They are also important in the paint, varnish, baked-on enamel and lacquer fields.

Laminates range from flexible sheets to materials rivaling steel in strength - weight characteristics. Synthetic resin adhesives have been used to laminate almost anything available in sheet form—even thin sheets of metal have been successfully laminated.

The packaging field makes use of plastic films such as cellophane, ethyl cellulose and vinylidene chloride.

Radio cabinets, automobile handles, hardware novelties and electrical housings are among the best known applications, misjudged by many to represent the whole field. The term plastics, however, does not refer to a single type of material any more than the term metal does.

Dirt Removing Method

Dirt often is held to a fabric by electrical attraction. To remove the dirt, the electrical attraction must be broken. Soap and detergents do this. British Launderers Research association is trying high-frequency inaudible sound waves, on the theory that they will shake out the dirt particles, emulsify them in the cleansing solution and thus prevent redeposition on the fabric.
