Life Average Of Americans Climbs to 67

NEW YORK—Life expectancy in America today is at an all-time high of 67 and still advancing, although at a somewhat slower pace than formerly. If a woman gets to be 65, she can expect to live almost to 80 on an average; a man somewhat less.

The sexagenarians have become America's new glamor kids. They are getting almost as much attention in the papers as the teenagers. That's a lot of attention.

Teenagers always have been with us but only in recent decades have their elders accepted so generally the proposition that they dress differently, act differently, and have different codes and problems that are well worth studying and humoring.

The sexagenarian also has been with us always, but never in such numbers as now.

You have the actuaries' word for it that he is on the increase. The American population in general is growing older. One estimate is that 10 million of us are 65 years old or older now, and that by 1980 the number will be 21 million out of a 150 million total.

Cold figures like that have made America age conscious.

Worry About Support

People who worry about tomorrow are figuring right now how such a percentage of oldsters can be supported in the style to which they will then be accustomed. They are trying to dope out the effects of such a trend on taxes, industry and politics.

The medical profession, having fought to a standstill some of the diseases of childhood and youth, is swinging the spotlight from pediatrics to geriatrics, the study of the aged. Heart disease and cancer the bane of later years, are present targets.

At Baltimore, a United States public health service unit is trying to find how to make people live out normal lives as vigorous, useful citizens. An association for successful aging has been formed.

The dictum that life begins at 40 once was novel. In the depression, good will groups labored to prove that men out of a job at that age are material for re-employment.

"Slick to Be 60"

Now nothing less than "it's slick to be 60" would be likely to command attention. Experts say premature retirement brings about speedy incapacity and death, and that older employes are capable and trustworthy.

The theorists are thinking less about pensions and more about opportunities for continuing work and usefulness. Old folks proved themselves in the last war as a real labor reserve.

A radio network program titled "Life Begins at 80" is trying to steal the show from the quiz kids. It's no wonder, as a result of all this, that individual oldsters command the limelight.

Interviewing centenarians on how to be 100 is an old sport. Lately it's got to be a fad.

"Moderation in everything" seems to be the standard reply. But here are lots of others, like—"Maybe because I wear two petticoats." "I've been a faithful smoker." "Be seriously ill for a start." "Be interested in doing all possible for everybody." "Lots of work." "Never worry."

Doctors Seek Causes of Cancer in Science Field

NEW YORK — The new things science is making for comfort and pleasures may be causing some of the increase in cancer, Dr. John R. Heller, Jr., of the National Cancer Institute reported.

To find out, he told the annual society of the American Cancer society, a new kind of research laboratory is being set up at Georgetown University Medical school. This laboratory will study environment's role in cancer.

Nearly all the known causes of cancer, said Dr. Heller, are external—they are things man comes in contact with in his work or his community. They do not come from his own body.

This, he added, has caused suspicion that search will uncover many more external causes of cancer.

"Industrial progress," he said, "has been marked by many new substances contributing to the comfort and pleasures of life. But these same substances have been adding a whole new spectrum of poisons to man's hazards."

Stormy Weather Increases Petty Thievery in Chile

TEMULCO, CHILE — Stormy weather was blamed for a series of petty robberies in Temulco, Chile, which police seemed unable to stop. Residents of the town thought the trouble might be due to the small number of policemen on duty, or to the fact that on wet and stormy nights these guardians are wont to find sheltered spots and there pass the time. The police view: "Those who go out with the object of raiding poultry yards generally do so during wet and stormy weather."

ROGUE BASIN

reservoirs. Seven would be on tributaries; two on the main stem of the Rogue.

The alternative plan B found little support and should be discarded. Barrows said, and plan A should be adopted subject to final and suitable revisions.

The field committee concludes that there is no fully satisfactory solution of the Rogue river problems without compromise or adjustment of conflicting views. The Rogue, taken as a whole, cannot be considered solely as a wilderness—recreational—sports fishing area, or solely as an economic area of conventional agriculture — industrial—community composition, the field committee concludes.

RECONCILE DIFFERENCES

The bureau release states that its own agency, also the National Park service and the Fish and Wildlife service in collaboration with local and state interests, will seek to reconcile conflicting interests "to the maximum extent consistent with a development of the basin which is physically and economically sound."

Regional Director R. J. Newell, announced that the Bureau of Reclamation will proceed immediately with the preparation of an interim Rogue river basin report, "based on the best overall plan of development with full consideration of alternatives."
