Panel Heating Gains Favor

When that progressive citizen of the Stone Age, J. Clarence Cavedweller built a fire in the middle of his one-room-and-no-bath residence, he installed the world's first house-heating system. The Greeks improved on this with charcoal burners that could be moved from room to room. The Romans went a step further and figured out a central heating system with flue-warmed panels.

Today architects and engineers have refined and developed the Roman idea of panel heating. From less than a dozen installations 15 years ago, the number of panel heating systems has increased to more than 100,000 today.

A modern panel heating system consists of pipe coils, a boiler, a water circulator, and the necessary controls, as shown in insert above.

Hot water from the boiler is circulated through the pipe coils by the pump. The coils may be in the floor, the ceiling, or the walls. Wherever the coils are installed, the area gives off radiant heat and gently warms everything in the room. This is the distinctive feature of panel heating: warm surfaces. Panel heating solves the problem of heating basementless houses. With the coils imbedded in the slab, the floor area is so warm that children may play there with perfect comfort.

For the efficient and trouble-free operation of panel heating systems, correct installation under the supervision of an experienced heating and piping contractor is important. A contractor not only will know how to design the system but also will advise on the insulation which is vital to economical operation.

The HISTORY of ELECTRICITY

THE PIONEER LINEMEN WERE THE REAL HEROES IN THE HISTORY OF ELECTRICAL TRANSMISSION. WHAT WE KNOW TODAY ABOUT THE POWER AND DANGER OF ELECTRICITY WAS LEARNED THE HARD WAY BY THESE LINEMEN AS THEY BATTLED THROUGH STORM AND DISASTER TO KEEP THE CURRENT FLOWING.

In the past ten years in the power and light industry operating expenses have risen 163 percent; operating revenues have increased 94 percent; plant investment has gone up 20 percent; while income available for interest and dividends has risen ONLY 11 PERCENT.
