ANGLING ANGLES by old Hi

Among the best live baits for taking many kinds of both fresh and salt water fish is the crawfish or crab. In the soft-shelled stage of his crawling career, this pocket edition of the lobster is a choice morsel for bass, perch, pickerel, pike, walleyes, weakfish, channel and striped bass, bluefish, croakers and many others. Including the shrimp, these crustaceans make up a large share of the food eaten by inshore bottom roving pan and game fish, and therefore crabs are the means of making excellent catches for anglers who like to still fish and surf cast. You should lash them securely to the hook by means of silk thread or a rubber band, so that they will remain alive and active for the longest possible time.

If you are live bait fishing for speckled trout and run out of garden worms, nab a few grasshoppers from a nearby meadow and secure them to the hook also by silk thread. A lot of anglers are still unaware that grasshoppers are good bait for trout... Old Hi knows they are often mighty effective. Black bass also like these hoppers almost as well as they do the nymphs of Dragon flies... called bass bugs.

In many respects, tackle and tactics are similar for both fresh and salt water fishing. Take the practice of chumming, for example. By dribbling over pieces of bait fish (suckers, chubs, perch, menhaden, sardines, etc.) you get the desired game fish to come within striking distance of your hook.

This is an especially helpful system for getting barracuda, tuna, bluefish, weakfish, striped bass, yellowtails and others to come close and grab your lure in their eagerness to clean up the free lunch. And you can play much the same trick in fresh water angling—such as when fishing at a buoy for lake trout and whitefish.

On many occasions Old Hi has gained the cooperation of hesitant trout, whitefish, bass and pike by tossing over a few chunks of sucker meat. Likewise, the appetites of yellow perch, sunfish and catfish have been sharpened by letting the school mates munch on pieces of worms. Try this stunt when next you are at lake or stream, and biting lags.

Old Hi wishes to thank his many angler friends from coast to coast who have sent in requests for free copies of his illustrated books called "Fishing For The Millions" (fresh water facts), "Salt Water Sports Fishing" (about the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico seaboards), and "Pacific Coastal Fishing." New editions of each have had to be printed. If you haven't your copies yet, just drop a postcard to me, in care of this newspaper, and you'll get them pronto. Please print your name and address plainly.

SEED YIELDS OF CLOVER, ALFALFA DOUBLED BY DDT

Ladino clover seed yields were more than doubled in 1949 in Josephine and Jackson counties by dusting for lygus bug control, and alfalfa and lotus seed crops were also substantially helped with dust applications. L. G. Gentner, entomologist for the Southern Oregon branch experiment station at Medford, reports.

Dusting can easily mean the difference between a paying crop and little or no crop in ladino clover and without dusting it is impossible to produce profitable crops of alfalfa or lotus seed when heavy infestations of lygus bugs are present, the entomologist points out.

The ladino clover seed yield increase resulting from dusting is conclusive evidence of the value of pest control measures. In 1948, when only a few acres in Josephine county were dusted for lygus bug control, the average yield of seed per acre in the county was 57 pounds.

In 1949, the 66 growers who dusted their combined 852 acres of seed with DDT had an average yield per acre of 141 pounds. In contrast to this, 98 growers with 566 acres who did not dust received an average of only 63 pounds per acre.

Translating these increased yields into dollars and cents on the basis of the government support price of $1.25 per pound for seed, the increased gross return to those who dusted was $97.50 per acre. After deducting $9.00 for cost of materials and two applications, there was still a net increase per acre of $88.50 from dusting.

Breaking It Gently
The little wife, after giving her husband a good dinner, snuggled up to him and whispered: "Darling I have news for you. Soon there will be a third in our little home." His face lit up with joy. "You mean—?" he faltered. "Yes, dear," she continued. "Mother is coming to live with us."
