★ ★ The People of Illinois Valley Build A Bank

After the many maddening delays and skeins of red tape encountered by the organizers of the Bank of Illinois Valley, it is hard to realize that the idea and decision to organize a bank is little more than six months old and from idea to reality in six months is pretty good for any bank.

The desire for a bank in the Valley is probably close to 100 years old, and likely the need for it as well. Some banking needs, such as a supply of currency, have been furnished to a limited degree by the merchants of the Valley—their only reward for so doing was the fact they could stay in business, whereas without a supply of money circulating, business would have strangled immediately. Other needs, such as small loans, have been furnished by any individual who happens to be a few hundred dollars better off than his neighbor and didn't need the money right away. But for day in day out banking services, the Valley resident had to travel—30 miles one way or 60 the other.

Population, business and industry all expanded in the Valley, despite the lack of banking facilities, but still no bank was established here. It was pretty generally admitted by men who understood banking that the business was here—and that adequate banking service would create more business.
But for one reason or another the large banks were not interested in establishing a branch here, and a state bank could not be organized for lack of one essential ingredient—a banker.

A man with the banking knowledge and experience necessary to manage a bank usually had a nice paying job elsewhere—or could get a nice paying job elsewhere. Why should he spend the months necessary to organize a bank,
