FARM NEWS

Farm Refrigerator Plans Available

Plans for a newly developed two-temperature walk-in refrigerator for the farm are now available from Oregon State College. The unit may be built within another building or outdoors with addition of siding and roof. It features a simplified, tight seal between roof and wall sections. The plan, in addition to emphasizing simple construction, calls for pellet rock wool and a non-sweating wall duct and includes a bill of materials.

The refrigerator provides a room for chilling and storing meats and other farm products and a low-temperature room for freezing and storing fruits, vegetables and meats. The chilling room is 250 cubic feet in size; the freezing room, 100 cubic feet. Cost of the unit is estimated at $1,200 but this figure may vary from area to area.

During Hot Months Hogs Need Shade

Heat can kill hogs, and one dead hog weighing 180 pounds means money lost. Yes, hogs need shade in the summer time. If no trees or sheds are available for shade, it will pay to build a pole framework covered with straw or any other material that will provide shade.

The posts should clear the ground by five feet to let air circulate. Allow 10 to 15 square feet of space under the shade for each hog approaching market weight.

Home Building Comes First

The old assumption that farmers neglect their homes in favor of farm buildings and improvements just isn't borne out by facts. Latest U. S. Department of Agriculture surveys show that slightly more than half of the total value of farm construction goes for houses. Out of the remaining less than half, three-fourths is spent on service buildings such as barns and poultry houses and the rest for fences, windmills, pumps, etc. On the farm, about one-third of the money spent for houses is used for new construction and one-half for major improvements. The rest goes for miscellaneous repairs. This is in direct contrast to city figures, where most of the outlay is for new structures.

About half of the farm construction work is done by farmers and their families. This reduces the labor costs to about 25 per cent of the cash expenditures. In the city, labor costs run about 40 to 50 per cent of the total construction expense.
