ANOTHER WAR SONG.

We'll go down on our knees, boys, and
sift the seed around,
Shouting the battle cry of "Feed 'em!"
We'll hoe the beets and peas, boys, on
all our garden ground,
Shouting the battle cry of "Feed 'em!"
The onion forever! Put on your jeans, Chop down the pigweeds, hill up the beans!
So we'll rally to the fight, boys, and hoe
till candle light,
Shouting the battle cry of "Feed 'em!"
—Oregon Journal.

The Oregon supreme court has ruled that the prohibition law bars the manufacture of wine at home. The court said in commenting on the matter that the law seems unnecessarily harsh and drastic, but there is small comfort for the wine-makers in the comment.

The Myrtle Point Enterprise said something good the other day. It said a local newspaper is absolutely necessary to any community. It is the home paper that keeps the people of the community in touch with one another. The outside daily with its large service and quicker facilities may in some ways overshadow the home weekly, but the little home weekly fills a place that the daily cannot fill. It comes to your home as an old and tried friend, while the daily is a stranger.

Married men as a class are not to be exempted from military service but must show specifically that they are the sole support of their families. The Eugene Register says that here's where the man whose wife takes in washing gets what is coming to him, but we are not so sure of it. There are hundreds of families in this day of high prices in which both "father" and "mother" are compelled to work for wages to keep things going. The Register's remark would have been more fitting a few years ago than it is now.

Young men wishing to serve their country by enlisting in the U. S. Army please leave your names at the Halsey postoffice.

The HALSEY ENTERPRISE

MAKES CLUBBING ARRANGEMENT WITH

THE OREGON FARMER

Offers Unusual Opportunity To Its Readers

AMONG our large circle of readers there are a great many who are interested directly or indirectly in fruit growing, dairying and other branches of farming. All of these naturally wish to keep in close touch with agricultural activities throughout the state; and to know about any fight which is being waged for the measures Oregon farmers want and against all sorts of schemes that are detrimental to the people and agricultural interests of this state.

We have, therefore, made a special clubbing arrangement with THE OREGON FARMER whereby any farmer or fruit-grower, who is one of our regular subscribers and who is not now a subscriber of THE OREGON FARMER, will be entitled to receive THE OREGON FARMER in combination with this paper at the same rate as for this paper alone.

This offer applies to all those who renew or extend their subscriptions as well as to all new subscribers. If you are interested directly or indirectly in Oregon agriculture, do not miss this unusual opportunity but send your order in now.

THE OREGON FARMER is the one farm paper which is devoting itself exclusively to the farming activities and interests of Oregon. It has a big organization gathering the news of importance to farmers, dairymen, fruitgrowers, stockraisers and poultrymen; and it has the backbone to attack wrongful methods and combinations and bad legislation, and support honest leaders and beneficial measures. We are confident that our readers will congratulate us on our being able to make this splendid and attractive clubbing offer.

POULTRY AND EGGS

MORE HENS NEEDED.

Farmers Should Keep on Hatching Chicks Until July.

The nation is confronted with a serious shortage of laying hens, and farmers should do their part in solving one phase of the food supply problem by hatching more chicks than usual this season, believes Ross M. Sherwood, acting head of the Kansas State Agricultural college poultry department.

Because of the high feed prices farmers sold hens last fall that ordinarily would have been retained for breeding purposes and egg production. The low egg production this spring has been due to the shortage in laying stock and to the failure on the part of poultry raisers to feed their hens adequately.

Reports from the largest egg buyer in Kansas show that the egg production is from 20 to 40 per cent lower than it was a year ago, and last year's production was below normal. The government reports 38 per cent less eggs in cold storage on April 1 than at that time last year.

The days will soon be here when the midday sun can do a lot of damage to stock exposed to it. This is probably more the case with chicks than it is with grown fowls; but, nevertheless, they all need it. Trees furnish the most cooling shade. Where trees are not available canopies should be erected, made by driving stakes in the ground and covering the top with burlap. The picture shows such a contrivance.

Give the laying hens more feed. They should have a good feed of grain at night and all the sour milk they can use during the day. The farmer should use the cheapest grain feed he has, whether corn, kafir or feterita.

It is too common a practice on the Kansas farms to let the hens shift for themselves during the spring and summer, or, at most, to throw them a little grain. Birds fed in this way seldom give a profitable production the following fall and winter. The most serious shortage will come next November, December and January, unless precautionary measures are taken.

Keep on hatching until the 1st of July and have an abundance of young chicks to help bolster up the food shortage. Well fed chicks will weigh three pounds in fifteen to seventeen weeks, and this is a profitable time to put them on the market. It gives a larger carcass for food and is just as profitable for the farmer. A three pound chick will eat eight to ten pounds of feed in addition to what it picks up on the farm. There is money in them even at the high price of feed.

The pullets should be well fed so that they will be ready to lay before cold weather. Caution should be taken not to develop small breeds too early, for pullets laying before Sept. 15 are apt to molt in the fall and thus lose three months of egg production.

Taking Big Chances

It is a great risk to travel without a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, as this preparation cannot be obtained on trains or steamships. Attacks of bowel complaint are often sudden and very severe, and everyone should go prepared for them. Obtainable everywhere.
