Jess Cross Hurt

Last Monday at the ware house while Jess Cross was unloading a load of hay he met with what came very near being a mortal accident.

He had started a bale of hay from the load and it had nearly reached its destination when the pulley that was fastened to one of the rafters gave way, or came unfastened, and let the bale of hay come back onto the load, and the pulley itself came down and struck Jess a glancing lick on the back of the skull. Had the pulley struck him squarely on the top of the head he would never have known what hurt him. As it was he escaped with a broken skull.

He was taken home as soon as he could be moved. He is getting along as well as could be expected. On Wednesday eve he got out of bed and came out and sat awhile on the front porch.

If no serious complications set in, it is thought he will get along all right.
