Singing School.

Early in the Fall the editor of his paper undertook to organize a singing school and the prospect seemed good. But after school commenced, a number of the best singers among the girls organized a Girls' Glee club, and then they thought they would not have the time to spare after their school duties and entertainments were attended to to attend a sight reading singing school, and so the singing school was halted for the lack of female voices.

Had it depended on the boys the school would have been running now, but the girls didn't feel that they had the time.

Last week the editor had an invitation to go out to Charity Grange hall to see about organizing a school, and he went out last Saturday night. He made them a proposition to teach either a 16-lesson term or a 20-lesson term and after a brief canvass of those present he was informed that they wanted the class taught and the money was advanced to purchase the books and the books have been ordered and the school will start in the near future, but on what night it will be has not yet been decided.

There were 24 signed up for the lessons and it was thought there would probably be more.

Announcement will be made in the paper later concerning the particulars.

Geo Alford, who had sent in his resignation as section foreman some time ago, was relieved last Monday by L C Merriam of Rogue River. He arrived with his family last Thursday and has moved into the little cream colored house belonging to J C Standish.

One evening last week a gentleman who was visiting at the H L Straley home was out driving with Mr Straley's car and was returning home when his lights went out and another machine, whose lights were also out, collided with him, both machines being quite badly broken up. The gentleman and Merle Straley, who was in the car with him, both escaped without injury, but the driver of the other car, whose name is unknown, received a cut on the head, necessitating his going to a doctor to have it dressed.

T F Gibson was an Albany caller Saturday.

The editor attended a literary society last Saturday night at Charity Grange hall. He was much pleased with the program as there were some numbers that were exceedingly interesting. There was a reading of the past work of Mrs Senator Harding with a prediction of what her work will be when she is Mrs President Harding. Another reading on the life of Helen Keller the unfortunate blind and mute girl was quite instructive. There were other readings that were quite amusing, a recitation, some songs and other features. The evening was a very pleasant one.
