"The earth and the fullness thereof" is the primary source of capital. The farmer, therefore, is the nation's greatest producer of wealth. Farming and banking—production and distribution—should go hand in hand. The problems of the farmer are the problems of the banker. Both are vitally concerned in bringing about a proper adjustment of transportation and marketing costs. The increasing tendency toward a more sympathetic understanding of each other's relation to these problems is one of the very encouraging signs of the times, and will result in further advancement of their mutual interests.—Walter W. Head, First Vice President American Bankers Association.

DOCTOR'S ETHIC

(Naomi Swett in National Printer-Journalist)

Frank Jenkins, editor of the Eugene (Ore.) Morning Register, specifically and intentionally never calls physicians "Dr." unless referring to his professional services in some specific manner.

This attitude on the part of Mr. Jenkins is not only individual, but it is unique, in that Eugene is a college city, the home of the State University, where considerably play to "titles" is a part of its inbred atmosphere. Surrounded by respectful "Professor," "Dean," and "Doctor" salutations, which in themselves are the very essence of life in a college town—the editor of the Morning Register casts even tradition aside and never refers to "Dr." Jones as among "those present at a social function, but carefully places him along with the ordinary "misters."

There is a reason! "It is the Register's policy," says Mr. Jenkins, "to use the title, 'Dr.' only when it is a material part of the story. For instance if a man is injured and Dr. So-and-So is called we use the title 'Dr.' because it means something to the reader. But if we chronicle the fact that the same doctor has returned from a visit to California we omit the title."

Naturally, Editor Jenkins is frequently questioned "why" he had adopted this strange departure from a generally accepted custom. "It all starts directly with the physician himself," he explains. "The physician's code of ethics bars advertising—the newspaper's product—something beyond the pale of respectability. Consequently we do not care to embarrass and degrade the doctor by forcing advertising upon him against his will."

The editor of the Morning Register includes dentists, corn doctors and veterinary surgeons in this ruling—all of them.

Upon being asked how individual doctors react to this editorial policy, Mr. Jenkins replied:

"Curiously enough, we find that the individual doctor qualifies that section of his professional code of ethics relating to advertising by inserting the word 'paid' just before the word 'advertising.'"

"In other words, advertising is ethical enough if it can be secured without paying for it!"

"Far be it from me to say that we find that our rule outrages the dignity of nearly everyone employing the title, 'Dr.' Repeatedly our reporters have been told by doctors and dentists, who abhor the thought of advertising, that if they will employ the title 'Dr.' they will be given good stories, but otherwise they needn't come around for news. . . . But somehow, we managed to bear up under this deprivation."

Why Group Fights Group

America is suffering from a lack of economic understanding. It is, therefore, that we find group arrayed against group—that we find the grower at variance with the producer, the producer with the consumer and both with the carrier. It is because of a lack of economic understanding that we find capital and labor frequently striving against each other. Yet each element is vitally interested in each other for the final success of the entire endeavor—in the farmer growing a prime crop and getting a fair return; in the canner packing a palatable crop and getting a fair return; in the carrier transporting without damage or deterioration and getting a fair return; in the wholesaler making a wide distribution and getting a fair return; in the retailer satisfying his customer and getting a fair return; in labor aiding each of the processes and getting a fair return; in capital supplying the money and credit to make each process possible and getting a fair return, and in the consumer receiving a pure, nourishing, dependable, wholesome health giving article at a fair price. There is this community of interest in the production and consumption of human requirements that should prohibit strife among the producing and consuming elements.—J. H. Puellcher, President American Bankers Association.

Last Sunday morning the top of Mount Etna blew off with a noise like the crack of doom (we suppose—we never heard either of them) and five new craters opened on the slopes. A flow of lava 900 feet wide and forty or fifty feet in depth swept down the mountainside, destroying everything before it, including eleven villages. The people had fled, warned by premonitory rumblings and tremors. A few days before earthquakes had killed 3000 people in Persia and destroyed much property.

Mr. Silver.

Now that the farmers have had a new system of intermediate credit-loan banks conferred on them by the farm bloc, together with $60,000,000 of working capital to be repaid when they feel like it, and authority to borrow $600,000,000 more, they are talking of making a farmer the next President of the United States. Gray Silver is the individual. Geographically, Mr. Silver is not a Western man unless West Virginia is Western, but intrinsically he is. Before Mr. Silver was sent to Washington by the American Farm Bureau Federation to run congress, he had westernized the Shenadoah apple country, put West Virginia apples on a par with those of Washington and Oregon and had hewed a fortune out of opportunity from a standing start. Also he acquired an education in the school of experience and by omnivorous reading. In two years in Washington, Silver made the long-befooled farmer the dominant class in national legislation, having extracted no less than twenty-five laws in the interest of agriculture from the 67th congress. Silver happens to be a democrat and the democrats are frantically seeking a Moses. Silver's farm bloc has proved that party lines are only legends, and his advocates say that his nomination will add the farmer vote of North and West to the usual Democratic majority of the south. Will Silver fight it out with Henry in the democratic national convention?—June Sunset.

Discovery of a simple but effective cure for infantile paralysis, that dread scourge which has baffled medical science, has been made by a Chicago woman, who prefers to retain her anonymity. Her treatment has been tried out with marked success at the Northwestern university medical school and has been adopted by the Visiting Nurse association.

The woman credited with the discovery had a little daughter crippled with infantile paralysis. In hope of obtaining relief, she took the child to Florida and permitted her to spend much time in the water at a shallow beach. She was amazed after a few days to see the child strike out and swim, having suddenly recovered the use of her limbs. So rapid was her recovery, that parents installed a swimming tank in the home and continued the tepid water treatment. Then experts at Northwestern university medical school, familiar with the child's history, became interested, with the result that a large tank was built and most satisfactory results have been obtained.

At the close of the Dryer meetings at Harrisburg seven persons from Eugene and one from Harrisburg were baptized.

Hens Kept Happy

The mention of carbolineum in the advertisement of the Ringe drugstore this week reminds the editor of his use of that insecticide when he kept a few hundred hens in Eugene.

The label on the can recommends the liquid for chicken mites—the little red villains which live in crevices in buildings or in the ground and come out at night and suck the lifeblood of hens. To get rid of the mites the roosts and so much of the wall as would be touched by the hens' feathers were painted with carbolineum. It does not evaporate readily and once in three months was found to be often enough to apply it. The insects would not cross it to reach their prey and the hens enjoyed life and the egg output increased.

But a surprise was in store. It had been presumed impossible to keep a flock of hens entirely free from the large hen louse but within six months after using carbolineum the premises were free from them and not a specimen could be found during a number of years that the flock was maintained.

Fresh loganberries will probably be chilled and shipped east this year.
