Albany Directory

This is good advice: "If you live in Albany, trade in Albany; if you live in some other town, trade in that town." But in these automobile days many residing elsewhere find it advisable to do at least part of their buying in the larger town. Those who go to Albany to transact business will find the firms named below ready to fill their requirements with courtesy and fairness.

The county will pay the death and funeral expenses of Sheriff Dunlap.

The new Pine Grove school-house was built by subscriptions. About $70, which was cleared at the dedication, will be devoted to equipment.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Forster got home Sunday from their two-months' vacation tour of the country, which they enjoyed to the limit.

J. E. Davis, who for a time owned and operated the Albany-Brownsville stage line, is driving between Portland and Roseburg for the Pickwick Stage company.

A drive on a quiet morning from Halsey to Albany showed the size and importance of the tourist traffic. Thirty-four cars of all descriptions were passed on the road, twenty-eight of which were from out of the state.—Albany Democrat.

Dr. Marks was called Thursday morning to attend Manuel Ball, who had been severely injured in falling from a load of hay on the Moss farm, about four miles this side of Tangent. Ball was expected to recover without serious results.

County Fair Manager Trofiter is urging granges, community clubs and others interested to put up a community building on the fair grounds. He thinks most of the work would be donated and the cost would not be great. A feature of it would be a much-needed rest room.

Travelers are so much delayed, waiting for the ferry where the Harrisburg bridge ought to be, that a couple of refreshment stands have been opened there and are doing a good business. The Bulletin remarks: "This is possibly the only place in Oregon where tourists are held up any length of time."

When the weather man figures out the monthly mean temperature this year he makes it appear about normal, notwithstanding the predictions of "scientists" that we are speeding to an ice age, due to capers the sun is cutting up. But taken day by day it is about the meanest mean temperature we ever had. It comes in slices, sandwich style. First come a few days when everybody hollers for Clark's ice cream and cold drinks and the old swimming hole, and then a few days when we build a fire to take off the chill.

When the Enterprise was printed last Thursday President Harding was believed to be well on his way to recovery from the illness which had caused a halt at San Francisco with his proposed tour unfinished. At 7:30 that evening Mrs. Harding paused as she sat at his bedside reading to him. He said: "That's good; go on," and raised one hand, which dropped back and he was dead from apoplexy. The news reached Halsey a few minutes later by a radio-telephone message received simultaneously by the two receiving outfits here, those of H. C. Davis and O. W. Frum. The Halsey telephone office received the tidings at about the same time.

With last week's issue we bade adieu to the San Francisco "Custard Cap," to ingenious, ingenious and energetic Letty and to generous and motherly Mrs. Penfield, the portrayal of whose acts and experiences cannot but have had an elevating moral effect on many who have read it. In "The Secret Adversary," which we begin this week, a view of life is given from a different angle, but it is none the less entertaining for that. Agatha Christie is able to condense big ideas into small sentences, and she leads the reader in eager pursuit of the solution of mystery after mystery until the concluding chapter.

C. D. Johnson drifted into town today from Texas. In August, 1876, he began learning the printer's trade in this burg on the first paper Harrisburg ever had, the Nucleus. Mr. Johnson has followed the printing business ever since.—Harrisburg Bulletin. (Mr. Johnson was in Halsey earlier the same same day and called in. The Enterprise was ready for the press, but he set about a column of type for future use, and after he was gone his proof was read and the only error found was a misspelled proper name. Not one in a hundred of modern compositors and linotype operators is his equal.)

"Certainly not."
"Oh, very well, my dear boy. But I can assure you that that sort of thing might touch the heart of an elderly spinster, and she might adopt you, and then there would be no need for you to be a young adventurer at all."

"I don't want to be adopted."
"I forgot you had a prejudice against it. Now listen—how's this? Two young adventurers for hire. Willing to do anything, go anywhere. Pay must be good. (We might as well make that clear from the start.) Then we might add: 'No reasonable offer refused'—like flats and furniture. How would that strike you if you read it?"

Tommy was holding the paper thoughtfully. His face burned a deeper red.

"Shall we really try it?" he said at last. "Shall we, Tuppence? Just for the fun of the thing?"

"Tommy, you're a sport! I knew you would be! Let's drink to success." She poured some cold draught of tea into the two cups.

"Here's to our joint venture, and may it prosper!"

"The Young Adventurers, Ltd.," responded Tommy.

They put down the cups and laughed rather uncertainly. Tuppence rose.

"I must return to my palatial suite at the hotel."

"Perhaps it is time I strolled round to the Ritz," agreed Tommy with a grin. "Where shall we meet? And when?"

"Twelve o'clock tomorrow. Piccadilly Tube station."

The two young people went off in opposite directions. Tuppence's hostel was situated in what was charitably called Southern Belgravia. For reasons of economy she did not take a bus.

She was half-way across St. James park, when a man's voice behind her made her start.

"Excuse me," it said. "But may I speak to you for a moment?"

Tuppence turned sharply, but the words hovering on the tip of her tongue remained unspoken, for the man's appearance and manner did not bear out her first and most natural assumption. She hesitated. As if he read her thoughts, the man said quickly:

"I can assure you I mean no disrespect."

Tuppence looked him up and down. He was a big man, clean shaven, with a heavy jaw. His eyes were small and cunning, and shined their glance under her direct gaze.

"Well, what is it?" she asked.

The man took a card from his pocket and handed it to her with a bow.

Tuppence took it and scrutinized it carefully. It bore the inscription, "Mr. Edward Whittington." Below the name were the words "Esthonia Glassware company," and the address of a city office. Mr. Whittington spoke again:

"If you will call upon me tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock, I will lay the details of my proposition before you."

"At eleven o'clock?" said Tuppence doubtfully.

"At eleven o'clock." Tuppence made up her mind.

"Very well. I'll be there."

"Thank you. Good evening." He raised his hat with a flourish and walked away. Tuppence remained for some minutes gazing after him. Then she gave a curious movement of her shoulders, rather as a terror shakes himself.

"If You Will Call Upon Me Tomorrow Morning at Eleven o'clock, I Will Lay the Details of My Proposition Before You."

"The adventures have begun," she murmured to herself. "What does he want me to do, I wonder? There's something about you, Mr. Whittington, that I don't like at all. But, on the other hand, I'm not the least bit afraid of you. And as I've said before, and shall doubtless say again, little Tuppence can look after herself, thank you!"

And with a short, sharp nod of her head she walked briskly onward. As a result of further meditations, however, she turned aside from the direct route and entered a post office. Tuppence wrote rapidly: "Don't put in advertisement. Will explain tomorrow." She addressed it to Tommy at his club, from which in one short month he would have to resign, unless a kindly fortune permitted him to renew his subscription.
