room with its long table, but nowhere was there a trace of papers. Everything of that kind had either been destroyed or taken away. And there was no sign of Annette.

"What you tell me about the girl puzzles me," said Mr. Carter. "You believe that she deliberately went back?"

"It would seem so, sir. She ran upstairs while I was getting the door open."

"H'm, she must belong to the gang, then; but, being a woman, didn't feel like standing by to see a personable young man killed. But evidently she's in with them, or she wouldn't have gone back."

"I can't believe she's really one of them, sir. She seemed so different."

"Good-looking, I suppose?" said Mr. Carter with a smile that made Tommy flush to the roots of his hair. He admitted Annette's beauty rather shamefacedly.

"By the way," observed Mr. Carter, "have you shown yourself to Miss Tupponce yet? She's been bombarding me with letters about you."

"Tupponce? I was afraid she might get a bit rattled. Did she go to the police?"

Mr. Carter shook his head.

"Then I wonder how they twigged me."

Mr. Carter looked inquiringly at him, and Tommy explained. The other nodded thoughtfully.

"True, that's rather a curious point. Unless the mention of the Ritz was an accidental remark?"

"It might have been, sir. But they must have found out about me suddenly in some way."

"Well," said Mr. Carter, looking round him, "there's nothing more to be done here. Good-by. Remember you're a marked man now, and take reasonable care of yourself."

"Thank you, sir."

Hailing a taxi briskly Tommy stepped in, and was swiftly borne to the Ritz, dwelling the while on the pleasurable anticipation of startling Tupponce, but his enthusiasm received a check. He was informed that Miss Cowley had gone out a quarter of an hour ago.

Pierce on Prohibition

Governor Pierce says:

The Oregon legislature at its last session enacted drastic laws for the enforcement of prohibition. It created the office of prohibition commissioner. It has taken time to organize the forces but in the six months last past there have been 197 arrests, 182 convictions, and a total amount of $51,657.34 in fines, 8,505 days in the county jails for the violation of the law. Twenty-four stills and sixteen automobiles have been confiscated.

I find that the strongest deterrent for violators of the prohibition law is a jail sentence. Almost without exception, I have, as governor, refused executive clemency to those justly tried and sentenced for the violation of the prohibition act.

Alcoholic liquors clog the brain and prevent the God-given right of human beings to think. It is more necessary now to use our intellect as human beings than ever before. It is an age of machinery which men cannot safely direct on the roads and elsewhere unless the brain is clear. What America demands today is an active brain, because America stands at the head of the world in almost every human activity.

As governor of the state of Oregon I ask all law-abiding citizens to support the law enforcement officers of their community.

FARMER AND LABORER (Portland Telegram)

Mr. Gompers thinks of the farmer as a class. This is because he has thought and fought all his life in terms of class. He has declared before the labor convention in this city that he wishes labor as a class to lock arms with farmers as a class.

The cost of farm labor, the cost of labor that goes into farm equipment and supplies which he must buy, the cost of labor that goes into transportation to market, it is to the farmer's interest to hold down, since his own margin is eaten up by an increase in these items.

The problem of labor is very different. Labor requires cheap farm products in order to keep down the cost of living and labor demands increased pay for work because its livelihood depends upon the margin between the cost of living and the marketable value of labor. The very condition that makes farming unprofitable today makes labor profitable. The farmer is to a large extent groaning under the burden of the high cost of labor. The prosperity of the farmer will in the end be reflected in the prosperity of the laboring man, but in this respect capital and labor are one as truly as farm and labor are one.

An example of the wide publicity being given Oregon by the Southern Pacific company is seen in the current issue of the Southern Pacific Bulletin. Not only does the publication contain a lengthy article on the territory through which the railroad's new line from Kirk to Oakridge will pass, but it is well illustrated with pictures depicting many salient features of the country. The cover page shows a view of one of the many beautiful lakes in the Cascade mountains. An interesting feature of the publication is a descriptive article on Crater Lake by J. A. Ormandy, general passenger agent for the company at Portland.

A Golden Jubilee

Fifty-year Demonstration of Dignity of Farm Life

One more is added to the number of families who have prospered on farms in this vicinity and have come to Halsey to enjoy the autumn—the Indian summer—of life.

Because they were still unsettled in the new home in town into which they had just moved, the relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Jackson postponed the celebration of their golden wedding one week and the affair occurred last Friday evening.

At the prompting of Rev. Robert Parker of the M. E. church Mr. Jackson took a vow to cut the wood and milk the cows and Mrs. Jackson to darn his socks, fry the mutton, mend his pants and sew on his buttons.

Nearly fifty people enjoyed the proceedings and the banquet which was served.

Mr. Jackson has resided in Linn county since he was a yearling and Mrs. Jackson, who was Miss Mandy Bilyeu, is a native here. Coming to Halsey forty years ago from their former home near Scio, Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have resided on their farm in the Lake creek section, with the exception of two years when Mr. Jackson was sheriff and they made their home at the county seat.

Good management and industry have enabled them to achieve a fair degree of prosperity on the farm, and week before last they moved to town to spend their declining years less strenuously.

Among those in attendance were two sons and one daughter: Fulton Jackson of Harrisburg, with his wife and daughter; T. J. Jackson of Lake Creek with his wife and Mrs. George Hockensmith of Lake Creek, with her husband and laughter. Fred Jackson, another son, is a guard at Salem penitentiary and he and the other son, G. S. Jackson of Harrisburg, were unable to be present.

C. C. Jackson was a delegate to the national democratic convention in St. Louis in 1916, when President Wilson was re-elected. In the election of delegates he received more votes than any of the others who were elected, and of the seventeen counties in his district he carried fifteen, tied in one and was but twelve votes behind a resident candidate in the other. He had for his slogan: "For Woodrow Wilson and peace; for efficient preparedness for defense."

A granddaughter, Miss Ida Jackson, makes her home with the couple.

For four months the Harrisburg ferry has been operated day and night and carried an average of 650 cars a day across the Willamette. We want a bridge at Harrisburg.

Kenneth Cross was home from O. A. C. over the week end. He brought a well-developed set of muscles to bear on the problem of turning out 1000 posters on the Enterprise press Saturday afternoon.

Miss Eileen Baldwin, now of Portland, has filed suit against Dr. J. E. Bridgewater of Albany for $50,000 damages for having lured her into indiscretions which ruined her reputation.

Let us remind our correspondents once more that there is no such English word as "sumptuous" and that "sumptuous" means extravagantly expensive and does not describe any decent feed in Halsey. "Strenuous" is another word often found in local manuscript but not in the dictionary.

Two mysterious characters whose identity many readers are trying to guess have been frequently referred to in the chapters of "The Secret Adversary" which we have published. Let us whisper to you: Both of them have already appeared under other names, in the portion of the story already published. Can you guess who they are? Try it, and as the story unfolds see if you are right. Who is Jane Finn and who is Mr. Brown?

E. O. Stewart, after mourning for some time over the death of his wife, disappeared last July from the place he was farming on the Halsey-Brownsville road and has not been heard from since. He left a note requesting J. L. Hayes to dispose of the valuable stock and farm machinery on the place. Mr. Hayes waited, hoping to hear from Stewart again, but now advertises the property for sale at auction next Wednesday. Mr. Hayes proposes to let people know the sale is coming for he has had 1000 bills printed at the Enterprise office.

In Italy they are planning to award a concession to print advertisements on postage stamps. Over here, though, we have proved that you can't lick a good advertiser.—Eugene Register.

The pressmen's strike in New York city which prevented the publication of the daily newspapers there for the past week brought home to New York merchants the fact that newspapers are indispensable. The firms which advertise extensively declared that their trade fell off more than one-half when there were no newspapers carrying their announcement. The stores were practically deserted. The expensive circular letter system was tried as a substitute for newspaper advertising in placing the store news in the hands of the buyers. But they found out that nothing gets the results like the newspaper which is read by every member of a household while letters and circulars are only read by one or two in a home and often not read at all.
