Brief Chronicles of Happenings in Halsey and All Over Linn County.

Linn Norton, too, has a radio set. Brownsville and some local news came in Wednesday, too late to go to the linotype.

There is a man in Albany who habitually smokes coffee in a pipe instead of tobacco. Probably he smells better than the ordinary smoker.

Mrs. Charity Clark, in a work corresponding with her first name, has collected $45 of Red Cross roll call money and more has been promised. She has received a letter from County Chairman Nutting congratulating her on the success of the drive in this little burg.

Jennie Woodruff, by her remarks in conversation with her father, recorded in chapter 3 of "The Brown Mouse," shows that she still feels an interest in Jim Irwin, notwithstanding her contemptuous and effective "Humph."

James McMullen died Tuesday after several months' illness with kidney trouble on the farm near Harrisburg where he had lived for twenty years. He was 76.

Harvey Pugh, a Shedd farmer, ran off a bridge with his auto last week and escaped unhurt. Even the glass in the windshield was not cracked, although it was thrown to the ground just an everyday miracle.

Sheriff Richard and Deputy Cran call took a night trip into the Cascade mountains, eight miles east of Sweet Home, last week and seized the biggest whiskey still ever captured in Linn county. They found the apparatus in full blast, but the moonshiners were too quick for them and escaped.

Rev. Robert Parker had his tonsils excised in Eugene last week.

The postoffice prohibits the placing of Christmas seals on the address side of letter. Stick 'em on the other side.

A crew of linemen has been working on the telephone line between here and Albany, renewing crossarms and other appurtenances. They are now working south of Halsey and will make the line practically new all the way to Eugene.

W. P. Strandborg was here Thursday in the interest of the Oregon Public Utility information bureau, which include the Mountain States Power and other electric companies, whether telephone, railroad or what-not, in an effort to get before the public correct information regarding those industries. "Blith-hound thou knowest, and gray, and all the hounds; A horse thou knowest, a man thou dost not know." —Idylls of the King.

We have set rules for judging different breeds of dogs and horses and cattle and sheep.

In our everyday conversations we judge race horses by their speed; dray horses by their strength; cows by their butter yield; sheep by their yield and quality of wool, and men by their wealth or rank or education.

Brief consideration, however, shows that wealth is a poor standard by which to judge the value of a man. It is not hereditary, in the sense that speed and strength and high butter yield and long wool are hereditary among animals. Then, too, wealth is often stolen or secured by unfair means or secured by gift or made by the community rather than by the individual.

Tolstoy, himself a rich man, ridicules the tendency to judge men by their wealth. He represents a horse as explaining the human race to a colt. The horse says: "Men rule in life not by deeds, but by words. They love not so much the possibility of doing or not doing anything as the possibility of talking about different objects in words agreed upon between them. Such words, considered very important among them, are the words my, mine, ours, which they employ for various things, beings and objects, even for the earth, people and horses. In regard to any particular thing they agree that only one person shall say, 'It is mine.' And he who in this play, which they engage in, can say mine in regard to the greatest number of things, is considered the most fortunate among them."

A much earlier writer than Tolstoy, writing in the times of Nero, ridicules not only wealth but rank and physical qualities also as means of judging a man: "I am a better man than you, says one, for I have many estates and you are pinning with hunger. I have been consul, says another; I am a governor, a third, and I have a fine head of hair, says a fourth. Yet one horse does not say to another, 'I am better than you, for I have a great deal of hay and a great deal of oats; and I have a gold tridle and embroidered trappings'; but, 'I am swifter than you.' And every creature is better or worse, from its own good or bad qualities. Is man, then, the only creature which hath no natural good quality? And must we consider hair and clothes and ancestors to be judge of him?"

ANTI-LIQUOR MEETING

At the Methodist church Monday evening there were no vacant pews. Mr. Herwig's announcement of a free picture show made sure a full house. And the pictures came up to expectations. One of the two murders of sheriffs that occurred in this county within a year sent a shudder through the assemblage. Other pictures presented the operations of the moonshiners who defy the law as they did the milder one which they now pretend to despise.

The speaker stressed the necessity for every opponent of the liquor evil to be vigilant at every election till the present generation of vipers has ceased to poison the weak and the erring.

Church of Christ.

Last week we observed Thanksgiving Sunday in a way that pleased all. There was a good program of music at the Sunday school hour, and then followed the Thanksgiving message by the minister. Next Sunday is women's missionary society day and the women will have complete charge of the morning program at 11 a. m. There will be special music and a very special speaker—Mrs. Rosalie Chamlee, the wife of the minister. At the close of the service the annual offering will be taken from the church to help the women toward their goal in missionary work.

Lon Chamlee.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Bergreen of Portland spent Thursday with the latter's grandmother, Mrs. M. M. Ward of this city, and extended their trip on to Eugene before returning home.
