GRAVE OF FAMOUS INDIAN

Rifling of Burial Place of Chief Massasoit Is Denounced—Was Great Friend of Pilgrims.

Americans have, by discovering lately the neglected remains of Governor Oglethorpe, shamed the English into taking steps to honor the burial place of a leading founder of an American state. This is well. Oglethorpe lived and died an Englishman, but his part in the establishment of Georgia was important in American history and worthy of honor by Englishmen as well as Americans. But it now appears that lately we had buried upon New England soil a great original American, and that we have not only disinterred his dust, but presented to a New York museum such remains of his apparel and relics as were found in his grave.

The American whose burial place was thus dishonored was no other than the original friend and benefactor of the Pilgrim Fathers, Chief Massasoit of the Wampanoag nation. He it was who sent his henchman Samoot to the spot of shore now known as Plymouth to bid the Englishmen of the Mayflower welcome when they arrived.

With every reason to be suspicious of them, Massasoit received them with honor, favor and confidence. He was a kindly man—grave, noble of bearing, wise, liberal, just and truthful. He made a treaty of peace and friendship with the English settlers, and faithfully kept his part of its terms as long as he lived.

Under his directions the Englishmen were taught how to raise the American crops and how to utilize the resources of the forest. He did much to put upon its feet the infant colony which was destined to play so large a part in the history of the world. Massasoit died at Warren, now in Rhode Island, and was buried there—buried in a gold-laced coat that Governor Winslow had presented to him, and with the brass-barreled pistol which was also the Pilgrim governor's gift.

In the Indian fashion, the grave was unmarked, but it was rifled, and in it were found crumbling bones, and also the shreds of gold lace of Governor Winslow's coat, the brass barrel of the pistol and also a medallion with a bust of the prince of Orange which must also have been Massasoit's property.

The identification appears to have been complete—and also the despoiling of the kindly Indian's grave. And now the question is: Why should not Massasoit's bones, if any trace of them now remains, be left to rest in peace? Does a great American of 300 years ago become merely a museum curiosity because he was an Indian?—Boston Transcript.

Dr. Shelton has always made his radio outfit a means of giving free entertainment to the people of Brownsville. Concerts, lectures, sermons, etc., from various far-away places have been enjoyed "without money and without price." He has been a beneficent "prince of the power of the air." Now he has received an anonymous threat of dire consequences if he does not desist. Perhaps the threatener, if he dared to come out in daylight (skunks work in the dark) would look like the representation below.

Burlough Nears End
Last week a report became current that Miss Goldie Wells, missionary in Africa, who had been at home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Wells, and family, on a furlough, had started on her return to the dark continent. An Enterprise writer turned it in and it was published as a fact. It was erroneous. The lady had gone only to Portland on a brief trip. During her visit home Miss Wells has talked in many places in the northwest regarding the work done in Africa. The latter part of this month she expects to go for a month's stay in Kentucky and in March she expects to set sail on her return voyage to her field of labor. Next seventh day, which will be the last Sunday of Miss Wells' visit to Halsey, the women's missionary society of the Christian church will hold a farewell meeting in her honor at their house of worship at 2:30. All ladies are invited to be present to meet the young worker before her departure. It is anticipated there will be many present to hear her goodby message. Mr. Robertson, superintendent of the Bible school, has asked that there be at least 100 present in honor of her and our Christ when Bible school assemblies at 10 A. M. It will probably be five years before she takes another furlough. At the Church of Christ there will be a special address in the evening by a near east relief worker from Portland. The Christian Endeavor society plans to have a gospel team from Eugene visit the society on the evening of Jan. 27. This team will have full charge of the C. E. hour and every person is invited.
