SHEKELS VS. PSYCHOLOGY

A famous psychologist once told me the difference between a woman's and a man's mind.

"Throughout the ages," he explained, "man measured success by the property he could amass in one form or another. Woman had to gain the approval of a man. His surplus provided for both her physical and spiritual needs.

"These two traits run deep. Woman is more conventional, that is, more interested in community approval than man. However advanced a feminist, she usually gains pleasure from intangible approval rewards, while a man on the same job counts the cash."

"Pure theory? Perhaps. Yet in hundreds of letters from women in the working world, the intangible factors do seem to make for contentment. The truth seems to be that these women just haven't bothered to be materially 'successful,' because they're 'happy' in their work.

"This little letter is a case in point. Is Julia Wossman a success or not? Her name was sent by a member of the Louisiana board of health, who thought of her as a successful force in her town. What do you think?"

"Dear Mrs. Miller: I covet very much the honor of being written up as a woman who has succeeded on 'Main Street,' but such a write-up about me wouldn't be at all according to the facts in my career. It would be pure fiction.

"I am principal of an elementary school of twelve teachers, drawing a salary of only $1,800 a year. I'm a very obscure person, living on a 'side street' in a sweet, sleepy old Southern town.

"If you had asked for a story of some one who has been happy in a small town, I could fit into your plan. I meddle into nearly everything that happens in my little community, fall more often than I succeed, but enjoy the contact meddling gives me.

"Please, when you finish your plan of writing about women who have succeeded in small towns, turn to the 'needles in the haystacks.' I shall be so glad to be used.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "JULIA C. WOSSMAN."

Horses Liked Smudges.

Pack horses used in the Canadian survey party which mapped the land north of Athabasca Landing, Alberta, did not need to be taught what a smudge was for. The moment it was started they crowded up into the smoke to escape the tormenting flies. This made it easy to round them up for the next day's journey.

"I've often offered to take the management of things, but you know you've taken it all along, and seemed to think I wanted to push you out of your place."—Silas Marner.

There is nothing that is able to hold its place in the world without constant struggle. One of the keenest of all struggles is that between the established generation and the rising generation, whether of plants or animals or men.

Long ago, Abram and Lot, the older generation and the younger, found that "the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together," and they separated, the young man going to live in the cities of the plains, the older one going to live in the country of Canaan. Their example has been followed by many millions since.

The age-old struggle between father and son is embittered by the fact that neither recognizes it as a part of the natural working out of nature's laws, but each regards his own case as unique. There is in hardy families an interval of from ten to fifty years between the time the son feels capable of taking over the management of the farm or business or profession and the time the father feels ready to step out. During all this period it is to the young man's interest to push his father out of his place, and it is to the older man's interest to hold his own. The result is usually much the same as that observed when a young tree grows up close to its parent oak. After both have struggled in vain to monopolize all the sunlight and water within their area, they compromise by growing normally on the side away from each other and by dying off on the side next to each other—so that you will never see a perfectly developed oak unless you find one that stands alone.

The struggle is bitterest where the father comes into his fullest earning power late in life—notably in the professions of medicine and of the law.

"An unpractical observer," says Dr. Johnson, "expects the love of parents and children to be constant and equal; but this kindness seldom continues beyond the years of infancy; in a short time the children become rivals to their parents. Benefits are allayed by reproaches, and gratitude debased by envy. . . . The opinions

Let all come to see Monroe play against the Halsey boys Feb. 1 on Halsey's floor.

We have one new pupil, Miss Ida Jackson, who is enrolled as a junior. Fifty dollars in prizes is offered to Linn county students for essays on care of the teeth. The dentists of the state offer the money.

A. L. Beckendorf, returned missionary from the Philippine islands, gave a stereopticon lecture at the high school yesterday morning. He went to Junction City at noon.

In the national contest recently conducted by the Illinois Watch company, in the endeavor to interest the high school students in the study of ex-president Abraham Lincoln, judged locally by Attorney A. A. Tussing, Mrs. B. M. Bond and Mrs. H. F. English, Everett Corbin of the senior class was pronounced winner in the Halsey high school, and will on the 12th of February be presented with a medal, commemorating the event. On one side of the medal will be engraved the face of Lincoln and, on the other side the name of the student.

Miss Leitner offered to the junior who, judged by the same judges, wrote the best essay, a copy of "The Perfect Tribute." Gladys Hadley was given first place and Agnes Chandler second.

All public school-students in grades 9 to 12 inclusive are eligible to compete for $300 in prizes for essays on "Peace Time Patriotism," offered by the American Legion. It is expected that all the high schools in this county will be represented. The judges are Judge Bean of the federal court, State Superintendent of Schools Churchill and W. B. Ayer, chairman of the Multnomah county library association. Frank Stellmacher is the Linn county chairman.

In twenty-nine of the thirty-six counties in the state the percentage of attendance at public schools is higher than in this county, and Linn county is in twenty-first place in point of the percentage of boys who graduate from high school.
