This map was in the last issue of "Oregon Business," published by the Oregon State Chamber of Commerce, which kindly loans the cut to the Enterprise

To visit Mt. Hood you go 69 miles from Portland, which is 50 feet above sea level, over the paved highway to Hood River, 50 feet higher. Thence southward, over a graveled road, 23 miles, through apple orchards much of the way, to Mount Hood lodge, elevation 3516 feet. From here a road is promised next summer over which an auto can run westward to an elevation of 7000 feet.

From this latter point you climb by man power, and it takes but five minutes to reach perpetual snow and ice. You will be a good climber if you reach the summit, 11,225 feet above the sea. Portland is a little north of west from the mountain, and you start the main ascent from a little north of east of it.

Shedd Snapshots

By Anna Pennell: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McCumber left for Portland Thursday.

Who is the Goat?

Robert Morgan, in an article in the Dearborn Independent, says: Without exception, the reputable, well-trained physicians, the managing boards of the nation's best hospitals, the leading medical research laboratories, the state, county and city medical organizations, and those boards which have charge of our laws regulating the practice of medicine, are declaring with one voice that the present-day practice of gland surgery, gland transplantation, gland injection, and gland-pill dosage is utterly without merit, worthless as a preventative of disease, valueless in the prolongation of life, useless as a restorer of mental or sexual vigor, and actually damaging to the person submitting to it.

The goat-gland serums made from glands supplied by slaughterhouses from New York to San Francisco and from Minneapolis to New Orleans is, for the most part, dirty and infectious. The writer has had the privilege of examining not less than twenty bottles of this serum, manufactured by as many mushroom "laboratories" scattered throughout this country. Not one of these bottles was free from foreign substances, in some cases dirt and hair and other materials.

The writer has personal knowledge of four instances, in one western city, three women, and one man, all of whom are today in hospitals suffering from severe poisoning as a result of taking the gland serum injections administered by one goat-gland practitioner. And he is supposed to be one of the few well-trained physicians who have entered this field. How great then is the danger from the untrained operator?

There, Gertrude Atherton, with your "Black Oxen," take that!
