Interests Are Mutual

We have reached a period in the world's history when every small city finds itself inevitably a part of the metropolis. It is one of the advantages enjoyed through the advent of automobiles and good roads; and the interests of the city and tributary country are therefore mutual. What benefits Albany, the county seat and great metropolis of this vast agricultural section, benefits every town which has become a part of Albany by virtue of recent invention, and when we help to build Albany industries we help to improve our own communities.

It would indeed be difficult to say too much in favor of Albany as being a most desirable and delightful shopping point. It is essentially a city of excellent trading opportunities and markets for country products. And let it be said right here that these features are proving to be a great asset to towns in Linn county in all directions surrounding the "Hub City."

Pioneer residents can perhaps recall the days when muddy roads and the slow ox-team were a hindrance to success. Where in former years a drive to the county seat was a tedious task consuming the greater part of two days to go and come, today we find ourselves living in the very suburb of the central marketing city with only a few minutes pleasant drive. We become a part of the city—it is our home town. When we buy in Albany we support home industry. We help business enterprises which made modern advantages possible.

Nowhere in the great Northwest will be found a city that affords its residents a greater combination of advantages that make life more worth the living, than are to be found in and about Albany. This statement is made without fear of successful contradiction. To those who claim Albany as their home market, after a thorough investigation of the merits set forth of other places, this statement is unnecessary; but will possibly be of benefit to some readers who are casting about for a new field of opportunity, where, in their business pursuits, they may become allied to that silent, but most agreeable partner, "contentment."

People are today considering more fully than in former years the enhancements to a successful life represented by the best location naturally, and where are supplied the most abundantly all those acquisitions that go to make life successful and happy. And is it not true that, in the deepest meaning of the word, real success in life must be surrounded, at least in a degree, with such attributes as the business men herein named are daily providing.

The publisher of this paper earnestly commends these men to the readers, and recommends their support in the excellent industries they pursue.
