Democrats Nominate for President

John W. Davis and Charles Bryan are Selected as Running Mates in the Campaign

The democratic convention in New York has at last adjourned, after nominating John W. Davis of West Virginia for president and W. J. Bryan's brother Charles for vice-president.

We publish the republican platform this week. Next week we expect to have a half page report of the democratic convention, written on the spot. The full democratic platform will appear in these columns soon. Read the effusions of both parties and swallow what you can of them.

Treat Cabbage Seed to Prevent Disease

Very Simple, Essential and Low-Priced Insurance.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cabbage-seed treatment for the prevention of blackleg and black rot, two seed-borne diseases which cause heavy losses to the crop each year, is a very simple, a very essential and low-priced insurance, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Most cabbage seed is grown at points remote from the place where it is used and passes through many hands before it reaches the planter. Usually very little is known by the planter as to the prevalence of disease on the plants from which the seed was secured and there is no practical method of determining whether or not a given sample of seed is infected. Treatment of the seed therefore should be resorted to as an insurance against loss.

The methods of treating cabbage seed for these two very prevalent diseases is told in Department Circular 811, just issued by the United States

Department of Agriculture. Mercuric-chloride seed treatment is by far the simpler of the two treatments recommended. There is practically no injury to the seed. Its only limitation is that blackleg fungus, though greatly reduced, is not entirely killed, although black rot is almost completely controlled. The hot-water treatment will completely control blackleg, but will reduce somewhat the percentage of germination.

A copy of the circular may be secured, as long as the supply lasts, from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

THE OLD SOUTH YIELDS TO THE NEW WOMAN

A North Carolina newspaper recently ran a picture that any society editor would crave. The well-arranged hair, the shapely throat, the charming profile were accompanied by mention of a "member of an old and prominent family of Cartaret county." It was a story of an island of femininity entirely surrounded by men. But the men had set about a directors' table, and welcomed Bertha Hellen as the newest officer of the Raleigh Banking and Trust company, the first woman assistant cashier in Raleigh.

Southern Main Street men please take to heart her words to other business girls.

"No one of you can appreciate my position unless you have been a girl in the South, where the woman is still having a struggle to gain her position in the business world. My home town cashier told me he had no question as to my ability. I could never be an officer in his bank merely because I was a woman. From that day I worked to become an officer in a larger bank than his."

Young Bertha Hellen, after she had got her foot on the ladder of success, had to face the one hardest type of opposition. "I worked for eight years in the little bank in my home town," she says. "I never had more than ten days' time off during a year. Sometimes I worked two years without vacation. I took as much interest in that bank as if I had a big salary, or the presidency. In the ninth year I asked to be made assistant cashier."

"I don't think a woman can hold that kind of position," the cashier told me. That ended the matter—for him—but not for me.

"The next year I was paying teller in a large bank in Wilson, at doubled salary. Seventeen months later I promoted myself to a Raleigh bank."

Save for the petty vision of that first cashier and others like him, Bertha Hellen finds many big things on Main Street. "The average young girl's character grows better, I feel, when she can have the influence of home life. She has a chance to know people better. My experience is that she can have more social life along with her work than the strange girl in a strange city."

"If one aspires to big things, it looks sometimes as if it is necessary to leave the small town. But we ourselves may be bigger in a small town. Even if we do not have a big-paying position, our lives may count for more in the little home church and community."
