EDUCATIONAL FICTION

In "A Man for the Ages" the Enterprise published a true story of the civil war and of Abraham Lincoln, the homely best-loved American. The same story has since appeared in the movies and thousands have seen it with sympathetic thrills.

The narrative of Jim Irwin's struggle and victory, in this paper later, gave an insight into the beginning of the teaching of agriculture in the public schools, which has led to the juvenile agricultural and industrial club system in which the boys and girls of Shedd and other Oregon towns have gained much fame. We here quote, on this latter subject, from a bulletin sent out by the Southern Pacific company under date of the 7th of this month:

"Oregon boys and girls are rapidly winning distinction in agriculture and stock raising. The current issue of the Southern Pacific magazine carries a story of two Oregon youths, Karl and Jack Dennen, 16 and 11 year old boys of Shedd, who were awarded a cup and ribbons for their Scotch bull 'White Cup,' entered in the recent Oregon state fair.

"The two have long been active in the boys' and girls' club. Through their training received at the annual state fair camps the two youngsters were able to raise their bull calf into a prize winning animal.

"The Southern Pacific annually awards six scholarships at the Oregon agricultural college to the boys or girls standing highest in agricultural or stock raising pursuits. Many of the boys specialize in the raising of potatoes. Some go in for raising barley, wheat, corn and rye. The girls usually go in for millinery, fruit canning, dressmaking, cooking and poultry raising. The members of the club are allotted space at the state fair and their exhibits for the past two years have been exceptionally creditable, the article states."

The Enterprise has just completed the publication of "Pay Gravel," a thrilling detective story emphasizing historical facts in the "wild and woolly" days of the Deadwood country. These are all stories which school pupils, as well as their parents and grandparents, can read with pleasure and profit.

Readers will find that "Sinners in Heaven," our next serial, is on different lines. A prize was offered for the best new story. Some of the best fiction writers competed. When the winner was announced she proved to be a lady employed in clerical work and who had never essayed to write a story before.

"Holier than thou" people may not like it, but live, sympathetic, red-blooded humans will find it well worth their while.

Celia Bellman, the governor's private secretary, is being sued for alienating a husband's affections. Celia (presumably the same) is remembered at Elmira, Lane Co., as having had a penchant for affections a few years ago. The plaintiff's husband, with what affections he still has control of, has hied away to a logging camp in pursuit of the nimble wage dollar, and time may reveal whether he or his spouse will garner the larger store of lucre from the situation.

Oh, yes, we love you, Portland. Unity of state interests is a great thing. You saved us from income tax (or income) on the products you handled for us and now have knocked out the income tax law by using $42,000 of your income from handling those products and our supplies.

Over $42,000 was spent to defeat the income tax in the late election.

The subject cannot come up in the legislature now for two years. Farmers and property owners should see to it that friends of the tax are elected next time to enact a new and better law.

Several innocent persons have recently been shot by mistake by officers hunting criminals. Would it not be well to require hunters to see the horns before shooting at a devil, the same as in case of a deer?

Stopping the Paper
(Corvallis Courier)

In the writer's first newspaper days, when a subscriber came in and stopped the paper, he almost considered it a personal affront, but as he grew older in the business, and gathered experience, he learned that stopping the paper is a subscriber's prerogative, and that the best intentions in the world couldn't keep some folks from exercising this prerogative.

There is one type of man who stops his paper and makes the editor believe there really is a hell. This is the sort of man who has read the paper month after month, and year after year, and then when the publisher asks for a little cash to apply on account, the subscriber resents the "dun" as he calls it and verbally castigates the editor and tells him he never subscribed for the paper in the first place, and in the second place it isn't worth a tinker's dam, and in the third place he didn't get it more than every other week, and in the fourth place he just guesses the government says that any newspaper sent to a subscriber after his time is out cannot be collected for, so just stop the old rag.

There is another type of subscriber whom most editors of country weeklies know altho they fail to honor the type. This is the man who gets a paper for a long time and probably owes from one to five years' subscription. Then, when he begins to figure that some day the editor is liable to ask him to pay for it, he refuses it at the postoffice and lets the government notify the publisher that the paper is no longer wanted, and the publisher must stop sending it. Such a subscriber usually pays no attention to the "duns" the publisher sends and as the account is hardly worth suing for, he is finally left alone to his victory.

But there is the occasional man who really likes your paper, yet for purely personal reasons feels he cannot afford it. He stops the paper with an apology, and makes you feel like an old friend has been lost.

Grow Supplemental Feed in Hogging Down Crops

When corn is to be hogged down it is always advisable to grow some supplemental feed along with the corn. Soy beans and velvet beans are good crops for this purpose. In the case of corn and soy beans the hogs will balance their ration fairly well, but in the case of velvet beans, the hogs may eat the corn first and leave the beans alone to be grazed later. In this case some of the corn may be gathered and fed to the hogs later. If the hogs are given free access to a mineral mixture, feeding value will be added to these crops. It is possible to arrange forage crops so that hogs may be turned on the fields for a period of time and turned out later for the market without having been hand-fed a single day during the entire finishing period.
