Thanksgiving Prayer

The autumn, perfect as your love,
Lies over all the land;
And in each field, each glowing tree,
We see your precious hand.
And so in every wayside church,
Our grateful hearts we raise,
To thank you for your mercies, Lord,
Upon this day of days!

—Christian Herald

Think of a picnic on this day in our climate—the thought is enough to induce chills!

To my great regret I could not be at two places at one time, and, as there was another number on the program for this day—a "luau" or feast for indigent Hawaiians—I betook myself at an early hour of the afternoon to Lunalloo Home to witness the ceremony from beginning to end.

Arriving in good season there was opportunity for making various observations.

The "laying of table" is by no means a neglected art with the Hawaiians. A grassy strip of lawn is thickly covered with "tie" (pronounced tea) and fern leaves, plates and bowls are tied up most dexterously with these tie leaves, which are smooth and seem particularly adapted to their various needs.

The bowls were filled with "poi"—a pasty substance prepared from the taro plant, the latter being their staple product, every part of which is used for one dish or another. This plant belongs to the caladium family, and the butt only is used for this national dish.

Each plate contained a generous supply of roast pig, which is, indeed, a rare delicacy, prepared after their fashion. The modus operandi follows:

Odd Form of Oven.
An oven of stones is arranged out of doors and heated, some bowlders, also well heated, are placed inside of the carefully prepared pig, the latter is wrapped in the leaves (the latter imparting a fine flavor to the meat), and the bundle entrusted for about seven and a half hours to the slow and steady heat of this model stove.

The accessories to the pig and pot were seaweed and a preparation of kookoi nuts, very salty and a fine relish to the poi, which is without any seasoning and rather tasteless (varying in acidity from day to day as it ferments); sweet potato was the vegetable served.

After the vigorous ringing of a large bell our old friends, lame, decrepit and many of them blind, but all decorated with leis (wreaths) filed out and got into position. Sitting down on the floor may be easy enough, but the getting down is a serious performance for rusty joints, and it took them some time before the weary members would fold under properly.

A short prayer having been offered by one of their class, they all entered the contest with a vigor and relish that did one's heart good.

As our native brethren believe in loyalty to their ancient customs, their fingers did service instead of modern table appointments, and it was curious, as well as interesting, to observe their etiquette.

Their poi was of two-finger consistency—that means that it was thin enough or of just such thickness that two fingers were necessary to manipulate it to the mouth—the first and second digits are thrust into the bowl and twisted out in such a manner that a large mouthful is the result—the process being repeated as long as contents hold out. With equal dexterity they separate the meat particles and pick the bones of their favorite roast pig.

No Fear of Microbes.

The microbe theory has evidently not reached the ears of these children of nature; at any rate they do not trouble themselves about anything so abstruse, for one pitcher of water was passed to any one whose thirst made itself manifest, and I noticed how carefully the left-over poi was scraped out of the bowls, only to be consumed later on by attendants.

It was intensely fascinating to follow their actions, and volumes could be written about their various personalities; but one blind man, who had lately taken unto himself a wife, much older than himself, and, perhaps, an Indian squaw, seemed to mostly interest the few chosen spectators.

This worthy disciple of Hawaii must have dieted especially for the occasion. It was ludicrous to see him, after he had finished his own portion, reach over to his wife's side and slip away a big mouthful of poi or pig. She did not mind it until she observed the attention it was causing, when she gently remonstrated, and he very courteously desisted from further appropriations.

Little Trouble to "Clean Up."
Not the least interesting was the conclusion. As the old folks were helped to their feet—which the majority could not do unassisted—the attendant very skillfully rolled up this mass of leaves, patch by patch, the bowls and plates having previously been dosed of their verdant dress and set aside, and the debris carted away. In a few minutes everything was absolutely clean. Not a vestige was left to betray the previous location of the festive board.

One old native became ecstatic and chanted to a child as though his very soul's existence depended upon keeping it up without taking breath—the little one, evidently being accustomed to such demonstrations, did not seem to mind the strapping of fingers, waving of arms and grinning and howling like one possessed. These chants are called meles, or olioli, according to the intensity or kind of emotion expressed.

Prospects Bright for Better Horses

Both farm and city are demanding more and better horses.

Despite the 15,281,295 automobiles and trucks in the United States, there are 18,263,000 head of horses and mules on farms today and 2,300,000 horses pulling loads in city streets. The coming of the auto and trucks reduced the equine workers in cities by 2,000,000 between 1910 and 1920, a reduction of 30 per cent. But during the last three years there has been a decided trend in the opposite direction.

Between 1910 and 1920 the horse population on farms decreased 10 per cent. On January 1, 1924, there was 18,263,000 horses, compared with 21,555,000 six years before. This was the smallest number since 1905. Still, 97 per cent of all field work is done by horses and mules.

Around 1915, under the influence of stimulated war production and replacement by mechanical power, horse prices began to decline. By January of this year average values per head were the lowest since 1903. Mule prices, unlike horses, advanced during the war, reaching their peak in 1920. In 1923 there was a third more horses and mules sold than during the previous year.

Good mares and stallions are scarce. During the war horse breeding languished. The number of colts produced failed to keep pace with the losses by death. Between 1910 and 1920 horse and mule colts combined decreased 22 per cent. The largest percentage of the horse population is old.

Low prices will continue to discourage horse and mule production and cause still further decrease in the population until the average price turns upward. Unless breeding operations are increased, demand will soon be greater than the supply. How soon the market turning point will be reached for the rank and file of horses is uncertain. Prices have already improved for the better than medium grades. The constantly increasing demand along with the limited supply is indicative that the turning point is not far off.

Farmers Need Baby Chicks.

WHY? Money interest and family necessities come high. Big business is helping your dairy out the wrong way. Better price below cost of production. Get in the chicken game. They have no substitute yet.

I will take orders up to the 1st of January for baby chicks from the O. A. C. WHITE LEGHORNS at 12¢, cash at the farm, and guarantee a good, strong chick.

I hatch only from my own stock. They are as good egg layers as I can get. Order now. Have been in the business for eight years, raising chickens to lay eggs. You will be pleased.

Outlook for Farm Prices

WHOLESALE PRICES DURING THE CIVIL WAR AND WORLD WAR PERIODS (FOR THE CIVIL WAR 1860 TO 1870 = 100, AND FOR THE WORLD WAR 1910 TO 1914 = 100)

WPI prices go up or down, or remain stationary during the next decade? If you knew the answer to that question and knew how to take advantage of the situation, it would mean money in your pocket.

Dr. G. F. Warren, agricultural economist of Cornell University, has collected evidence on the price trend to be expected. He finds prices are acting in almost exactly the same way they did following the Civil War. The price level following the Civil War continued to fall for 13 years. Dr. Warren believes price levels in the United States will again act in this way.

The present huge supply of gold has much to do with the situation. Great Britain alone has sent to the United States since the beginning of the war more than $1,800,000,000 worth of gold—nearly a quarter of all the gold money in the world. Before long, Dr. Warren thinks, Europe will take her gold back. Then prices will go down.

An Epic of the Airplane
SINNERS in HEAVEN
By CLIDE ARDEN

A crack flyer, an English girl and the latter's chap-crone, started via the air from London to Australia. They did not go to heaven but they dropped into an earthly place that was paradise for awhile.

Their adventures were entirely out of the ordinary and very thrilling, but in no way to be compared with a moral question that faced them. Can clean hands and a pure heart break a sacred convention? Can two people be married without a civil or religious ceremony? Did they dodge the difficulty or did they solve it? Did they regain their heaven?
