Quality Apples Now in Demand

With Growth of Consumption Buying Public Discriminates in Selection.

A survey of American nursery lists shows that there are more than 200 kinds of apples grown in this country and offered for sale as trees, but not more than 20 at most are of real commercial importance. With the growth of the consumption of apples, the buying public is developing a discriminating taste in selecting quality either for eating or cooking.

McIntosh Heads List. A study of the apples of New York in regard to quality shows that the McIntosh heads the list with Delicious second. Following in order of excellence come Grimes' Golden, Stayman's Wineap, Jonathan, Wealthy, York, Baldwin, Duchess and Ben Davis. The last named is one of the commonest and most largely grown for many years, but has lost heavily in public favor due to its poor eating qualities.

With the improvements and development of cold storage and more careful packing and shipping, the natural keeping quality is not such an important factor, and the question of quality can be given greater consideration. Many of the older and extensively grown varieties are surpassed in flavor as eating apples by newer varieties, which can now be kept and handled commercially as easily as the older, better keeping sorts.

Cooking and Eating. With the development of a discriminating taste, some of the standard apples will be used more largely for cooking purposes while the better quality apples will be used exclusively for eating as raw fruit.

Many people brought up on old-time sorts, not the tastiest apples in the world, but reliable standbys, have doubted their consumption of this health and strength giving fruit through an acquaintance with superior varieties made possible by the marvels of cold storage and the attractive and handsome displays now commonly seen in fruit markets, where a wide variety of apples is on sale in contrast to the limited assortment of former years.

Perfect System of Marketing Dressed Poultry With Very Little Delay.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) Farm women belonging to a home demonstration club in Anson county, N. C., with the help of the home demonstration agent, according to a report received by the United States Department of Agriculture, have developed a system of marketing their poultry in an organized way, enabling them to place their dressed chickens on sale with the least possible delay and to realize immediate profits.

Plan of Organization. The marketing was organized first by securing a list of every woman in the county having hens for sale and the number available. Next a meeting was held in each community represented on the list, at which the members interested were instructed in dressing, packing, making out bills, and other selling details. Each community was given a special time for its shipment to Wadesboro, the county market. Wednesday of each week was set aside as "dressing day" and Thursday as "packing day." The hens were brought to a central point, usually a club member's house or the schoolhouse, and everybody helped with the work of killing, picking, and after the hens had been cooled overnight, packing in barrels. If, as frequently happened, the extension agent received telegrams calling for an increased number of chickens, the local leader in some community farther down the schedule was notified to have her club members get their supply ready.

People Enjoy Themselves. People had a good time at these community "ben parties." The husbands and often the whole family came and helped. The value of receiving a check for all one's poultry at one time was greatly appreciated. Orders from individual housewives and from grocery stores, hotels, and tea rooms were also filled by parcel post. Through selling dressed chickens, orders were also secured for other products, including turkeys, fig preserves, pickles, and butter.

He disappeared about the time the shortage was discovered, but later returned voluntarily to face trial.

In accordance with a legal opinion handed down by the attorney-general, the state tax commission has announced that the collection of the state income tax for 1924, based on incomes

Koser, secretary of state. The registrations for the 11 months included 191,450 passenger and commercial vehicles, 2756 motorcycles, 609 dealers, 14,564 chauffeurs and 47,156 operators.

An unsolved mystery exists in Enterprise in the death of Samuel G. Hickman, who was shot and killed nearly a week ago. Cleve Melson was slightly injured when Hickman was wounded fatally. The two men and two boys were at a cabin on Rail creek and the men were preparing a meal. A shotgun was discharged in an adjoining room, the shot piercing a partition and lodging mostly in Hickman's abdomen, although some scattering pellets struck Melson. Who fired the shot has not been determined.

Kill Orchard Mice With Poisoned Bait

Outline of Effectual and Inexpensive Formula.

Mice and other rodents are beginning their destructive winter work in the orchard. For this reason steps should be taken by growers to protect the fruit trees, says A. Freeman Mason, extension specialist in fruit growing at the New Jersey College of Agriculture in New Brunswick. Clearing grass and rubbish away from the tree trunks and mounding the trunks with earth will protect the trees to a certain extent. Mechanical devices such as wire netting and tarred paper may be used, but in most cases, poisoning will prove an effectual and inexpensive method of controlling destructive rodents.

The United States Department of Agriculture recommends the following formula: Mix together, dry, 1/2 ounce of powdered strychnine and 1/2 ounce of baking soda. Sift the strychnine-soda mixture over 1 quart of rolled oats, stirring constantly to insure an even distribution of the poison through the grain. Heat the poisoned rolled oats in an oven until thoroughly warm. Mix 3 parts of melted beef fat with 1 part of melted paraffin, and sprinkle 6 tablespoonfuls of this mixture over the warm, poisoned rolled oats, mixed until the oats are evenly coated. Allow the grain to cool and it is ready for use.

If large quantities of the bait are needed, use 1 ounce of strychnine, 1 ounce of soda, 8 quarts of rolled oats and 1 1/2 pints of the beef-fat-paraffin mixture. It is very important to have the beef-fat-paraffin mixture hot and the poisoned rolled oats thoroughly warm, otherwise it will not be possible to obtain an even coating.

Tablespoonful quantities of the poisoned oats should be put in containers placed in the orchard. If mice are very abundant, a container should be used under every tree.

All poisoned baits and poison containers and utensils used in the preparation of poisoned baits should be kept plainly labeled and out of the reach of children, irresponsible persons and live stock.

To Protect Fruit Trees From Mice and Rabbits

A good remedy to protect fruit trees from mice is to break down mice burrows, and follow that by spreading poison bait about. Sweet potatoes, cut into grape size, make good bait when sprinkled with strychnine sulphate, one ounce to one bushel of bait. The bait is first soaked in a tub of water, then the poison, usually mixed with baking powder, is sifted over it from a salt shaker. A few pieces of bait are placed under each tree in wide-necked bottles, under boards or in open tunnels so that chickens and live stock will not come in contact with them.

To protect trees from rabbits, a heavy galvanized wire, about one-quarter inch mesh, serves well when put around the base of the tree and extending about 20 inches up from the ground. Newspapers or corn stalks wrapped around the tree with binder twine make less expensive protectors, but should be removed early in the spring.

Cutting Cordwood Will Serve Two Big Purposes

Many farmers have begun cutting cordwood. It is entirely possible to so conduct this operation that the yield is not lessened, while the remaining stand is left in better condition than it ordinarily is, says M. H. Tryon, forestry specialist at Clemson college. Many farm woodlots will show a high percentage of suppressed, overtopped and generally crowded and backward trees. Such stock should be removed for the good of the forest. Cordwood cutting furnishes a good outlet for this stock, even though only a few cords for domestic consumption are used.
