The Best Time in Many Years

That's what's coming at the Pioneer Picnic at Brownsville next week.

A Big Grange Day

Grangers from all over the country are co-operating to make the third day one of the biggest days the picnic has ever seen. Some of the leading authorities of the state on farm problems will speak that day. If you are a farmer, or are interested in the farmer you will want to hear this program the third day.

Prizes Offered

Every effort is being made to make this year's picnic a clean picnic. To this end liberal prizes are being offered for competitive sports. There will be something going on every minute, something that is worth while and that you won't want to miss.

Meet Your Friends

If you have an old friend that you haven't seen for several years you will be sure to find him at the Pioneer Picnic, because that's what the picnic is for. It's a place to get together with your friends and neighbors and have a good time. If you had to visit everyone you will chat with at this year's Picnic you would be calling on people 365 days each year and then some of them would be slighted. Your friends will be looking for you on the picnic grounds.

leading to the office, Bart saw through the window that the sheriff was awake, and alert, leaning over his desk and talking almost excitedly into the telephone. The receiver clicked to its hook as he entered, and the sheriff faced him.

"Where'd you come from?" he questioned sharply.

"Bellaine. I'm Marshal Rogers, and I've a message from the mayor."

"Mayor, huh? To help him out on some of his frameups? What have you people been pulling off over there?"

"The implied accusation in the sheriff's voice took Bart off his guard for a moment. He hesitated. Then—

"How's chances on enforcing a little law and order?" he asked.

"That's exactly what I am doing."

"Very well, then. Send enough men to Bellaine to drive out the bootleggers, the gamblers, the tin-born sports and sure-thing men. Incidentally, see what you can do about the king-pin of them all, 'Bull' Franniston."

The sheriff rose from his desk and walked forward.

"I'd be a little careful about how I made accusations, young fellow," he said rather caustically. "In the first place, you're the one who's been accused, you know, not Mr. Franniston."

"I?" Staring surprise swept Rogers' face. "What?"

He stopped. The door had opened and a dusty deputy had entered, slapping his wide-brimmed hat against his thighs.

"Got that fellow out there who pulled that shooting," he announced. "He's in pretty bad shape. What'll I do with him?"

The sheriff turned.

"Put him in the big cell where he'll have plenty of light and air and no kick that we pulled third-degree methods on him," came his command. "I've talked to the district attorney. He says to book him for investigation to-night and that he'll make out the indictment against him first thing in the morning."

"All right." The deputy had seated himself at the desk. "I'll just make out a memorandum of it, to remind him."

"Good. Put it there on my hook. Now—" and he turned back to Rogers—"as for you, just put it under your hat to walk straight and narrow, or I'll have you in here too! Make all the charges you want to, call me every name you can think of—the more the better. That doesn't interfere with me enforcing the law, and I'd just as soon arrest you as your deputy!"

"My deputy?" Then the eyes of Bart caught the writing of the notation which the undersheriff was hanging on the hook. It read:

"Bud Tarko, deputy marshal, Bellaine, Wyo. Charge, arson and assault with intent to kill."

A half-hour later Bart found himself again on his horse, hurrying through the night on the return to Bellaine.

In the first place, he knew that he could look for no aid from Sheriff Graham of Mannington. On the contrary, the arrest of Bud Tarko, on the complaint of Franniston and his crew, was extremely good evidence that the sheriff would be a hindrance and not a help. With the thought Bart straightened in his saddle and whistled slowly. Was that the reason why every gambler, every woman of uncertain morals, every con man and crook knew in advance the name of "Bull" Franniston as the man between, the person who would take their tribute and fit return be able to guarantee them safety from arrest?

An hour later Bart had told the whole story to Tom Jordan, the mayor. "Wait until I get my check book," he finally announced. "I'll put my signature on a few pieces of paper and give 'em to you. Then I want you to take my machine and go back to Mannington; use my name at the bank, and make arrangements to have 'em call me if there's any difficulty. When Tarko comes up for arraignment, bail him out! and do it if it costs twenty-five thousand. In the meanwhile I'll see what I can do about getting my lawyer in Cheyenne to come on here—and then we'll have a little battling from a legal standpoint."

Then Bart spoke, his hands half-raised and clenched, his eyes glistening with new hope, new enthusiasm.

"I'll be blamed if we're whipped yet!" he half-shouted. "If I can get Tarko out and bring him back here, and if he's half the man I think he is, mayor, we've just begun to fight!"

"What is it? Speak it up, son!"

"I can't!" The features of Bart Rogers were beaming. "But it's a hunch—and if it pans out—I give me those checks! Tell me where I can get that machine! I want to get on the road and start thinking over the details!"

Decrease Seen in Value of Farm Dairy Products

A decrease of $66,000,000 in the farm value of dairy products produced in 1924 as compared with 1923 is shown in estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture which places the 1924 valuation at $2,586,148,000 compared with $2,652,419,000 in 1923.

The decrease is attributed to lower prices for all farm dairy products except buttermilk, whey, and skim milk.

Whole milk sold and consumed on farms last year was valued at $1,714,000,000 compared with $1,750,000,000 in 1923; butterfat, $394,000,000 compared with $415,000,000, and butter made on farms $237,000,000 compared with $246,000,000.

The average of prices received by farmers for milk sold for all purposes was 5.225 cents a quart in 1924; 5.547 cents in 1923, and 4.73 cents in 1922.

Bees Studied on Delaware Coast

Carefully Planned Experiment Will Be Conducted to Solve Problems.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

How far will a honey bee fly from the hive for food? What is the economic limit to the distance the insect can travel for raw material? By what means does it find new fields of nectar-yielding flowers? These are a few of the time-worn questions which will be studied intensively by the United States Department of Agriculture. A carefully planned experiment will be conducted on the coast of Delaware, in a region having no nectar-secreting flora. The office of bee culture investigations of the bureau of entomology announces that one of the principal objects of the work is to determine the effect various weather conditions have on the flight activities of bees.

Flight Readily Controlled.

As the countryside has no flowers that will divert the attention of the bees, their flight can be readily controlled by the placing of supplies of artificial food. This "honey" flow will be kept constant and as a result any variation in the flight activities will be caused primarily by prevailing weather conditions. Automatic feeders containing sugar solution of known specific gravity will at first be placed at distances from the hives varying from one-eighth of a mile to three miles. There will be ten colonies of Italian bees, each colony on a scale so that variations in the weight may be studied. Records will be made of the increases in weight during the day to learn the hour to hour variation in the honey income. Records of loss of weight by evaporation at night will give information on the "ripening" of honey.

Move Feeders Gradually.

The feeders will gradually be moved to greater distances from the colonies to determine the limit of flight from the effect of distance on the production of honey—an economic factor from the standpoint of the bees and also from that of the beekeeper. Some feeders loaded with sirup will be placed in new and secluded places to determine if possible the methods followed by the bee in searching for new sources and the time taken to find them.

These and other obscure factors concerning the behavior of bees puzzling to beekeepers since antiquity, if solved will prove of much benefit to the industry.

Guard Against Bloating With Sheep on Pasture

It is necessary, of course, to guard against bloating when sheep are pastured on rape. The flock should be introduced gradually to the succulent forage, by first turning them on it when they are rather well filled up with dry hay. For the first few days the sheep or lambs should be left in the rape patch but a short time. After they become accustomed they will pasture it without danger except when the leaves are wet, in which case it is best to keep the flock out of the field until the plants are dry. Immature rape sometimes causes scours in lambs. It is best turned in upon when eight to ten inches high.

Substitute for Pasture

The silo is the best known substitute for pasture, and where land is valued at more than $100 per acre, very few acres should be devoted to pasture, for this same land put into good corn and that put in the silo would produce six to seven times more feed than if it is left in pasture, writes A. L. Haacker in the Iowa Homestead. From my experience I would prefer a silo in summer to one in winter if I could have but one, but a winter and summer silo makes on the average stock farm by far the most economic feeding arrangement.
