Military Aircraft Controversy up Committee of Nine Named to Conduct Sweeping Investigation of Subject.

Washington, D. C.—President Coolidge took first official recognition of the controversy stirred up in his last congress over the adequacy of American air power by appointing a special board of nine men to conduct a sweeping investigation into the subject.

Announcement of the president's action was made in a statement issued at the White House which said that members of the board had been asked to meet with him to organize and proceed immediately with its study with a view to submitting a report by the latter part of November.

Mr. Coolidge's action followed the Shenandoah disaster, in which 14 naval air officers lost their lives, and sweeping criticism by Colonel William Mitchell, demoted assistant chief of army air service.

Those named on the board were Major-General James G. Harbord, retired, of New York; Rear-Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, retired, of Washington, D. C.; Dwight M. Morrow, of Englewood, N. J.; Howard E. Coffin, of Detroit; Senator Bingham of Connecticut; Representative Vinson of Georgia, ranking democrat of the house naval committee; Chairman Parker of the house commerce committee; Judge Arthur C. Denison, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and William F. Durand of Los Angeles.

Sting of Mitchell Charges is Felt

Washington, D. C.—Rear-Admiral Moffett, chief of the bureau of aeronautics of the navy department, hit back at Colonel William Mitchell in hammer and tongs fashion.

In a lengthy statement replying item by item to the sensational charges of Colonel Mitchell involving "almost treasonable administration of the national defense by the navy and war departments," Admiral Moffett used torrid language in branding the various allegations as false.

"The most charitable way to regard these charges," said Admiral Moffett in concluding his statement, "is that their author is of unsound mind and is suffering from delusions of grandeur."

The Mitchell charges, Admiral Moffett asserted, "have done more to retard aviation and national defense than could have been accomplished by any other means." In their "falsehood and vindictiveness" the charges, he declared, are "almost without precedent in the history of this country."
