Longview Bridge Up to Congress

Washington, D. C.—The senate commerce committee's report favoring the Longview bridge presented in the senate by its chairman, Senator Bingham of Connecticut, is a general argument for the bridge, coupled with assertion that navigation on the Columbia river is fully protected, and that Portland representatives who appeared before the committee seemed satisfied.

The report argues that Portland has largely received the benefits of money spent on river improvements and that the three secretaries of war, commerce and agriculture could be depended upon to protect river navigation. The existence of the Vancouver bridge, it is declared, is an insurance against high tolls.

The report recites the contentions for and against the bridge and states that the Port of Portland, the Chamber of Commerce and the state highway commission of Oregon are opposed to any bridge at all, while the people of Washington, except those of Vancouver, are in favor of it.
