The legislature has passed an income tax bill and it has been signed by the governor. Now, it will be up to the people to ratify it. The chances are pretty favorable that this will be done. — Junction City Times.

The late Oregon legislature has written a record far above the average. No irrigation steal was put over, and some remedial legislation was passed. The Oregon compensation law was stubbornly protected. The Oregon system of government was attacked, but the attacks were repulsed. The primary law was not scuttled. The blows aimed at the initiative were blocked. An income tax was passed. An habitual criminal act was adopted. Many bad measures were defeated and good bills approved. — Portland Journal.

Who Wants to Bite This Bait?

A number of shrewd fellows are making a living off people who want to sell farms. They put out advertisements like the one offered to the Enterprise in the letter reproduced below. If you reply, you will get a letter saying that among the many seekers for Oregon homes in the writer's lists there does not happen to be one who wants just such a place as yours, but that a little judicious advertising will be sure to find a buyer. Send him $10, $25 or $50 and he will attend to the advertising and get you a buyer. If you send the money you will find that that closes the transaction.

Here is the letter:

Alzada, Montana, Feb. 25.
To the Publisher: Below appears advertisement to be run four times. Send ratecard for "Classified Advertising" and for reading notice to be run among local items, with change of copy each month. Also paper containing ad.
Yours very truly,

Alzada, Montana.

Wanted—To hear from owner of land for sale, ————,

We have not given the gentleman's name, but any one wishing to correspond with him can obtain it at the Enterprise office. Moreover, we do not run paid matter among local items. "No advertising disguised as news."

The University of Oregon Library appropriation bill is dead. Executed, but not assassinated by the governor, administration friends will say. And the matter considered in itself, 'tis true. For the governor, it can be argued, did but that which the legislature by neglect sentenced. The fault of the legislature is glaring. By enactment of the bill to provide the university with a library it officially recognized a vital state need. By failure to provide funds to supply that need it has proved itself insufficient to its admitted duty. — Oregon Emerald.
