Since the recent prohibition of reports of divorce cases in London the number of such suits has doubled. Some people (not stage celebrities) seem to have shrunk from the courts through dislike for the broadcasting of their intimate domestic relations until such broadcasting was discontinued.

Find Kentucky Has 2 Anti-Gossip Laws

Louisville, Ky.—Defeat in Tennessee recently of an "anti-gossip law" has caused students of history to dig into dusty tomes and discover that Kentucky has two, one enacted in 1924 and the other passed on from Mother Virginia to its lusty infant Kentucky. The latter statute is more than 250 years old, but its provisions are just as binding now as when the grand assembly of the colony of Virginia, in session at James City in 1630, adopted the measure.

The Virginia bill is known as chapter II of the acts and was passed while "the Merrie Monarch," Charles II, was on the throne of England. When Virginia became a state it adopted the acts of the colony, and when Kentucky was created in 1792 from Virginia that state adopted the Virginia statutes.

Dr. Shelton resigned as mayor of Brownsville and R. D. Coshov succeeds him.

ROMANCE OF WEEPAH

of dwellings have been tents. During the last week or so there has been an influx of building supplies, as all the available trucks in Tonopah were brought into service, and now the frame buildings are becoming more numerous. These buildings spring up in but a few hours after the supplies arrive in camp.

Fast Work.

One of the best examples of such work is the Weepah club, where "Hard Rock Jack" jovially greets all comers. It is a flat-roofed structure with a canvas sign bearing the words "Eats and Drinks." The material for this place was brought into camp at 1:30 Saturday afternoon. By six o'clock there were three poker games going full blast, and another famous old character of the camps, "Smiling Jack," was standing behind a short improvised bar ready to dispense cigarettes or liquid refreshments. Pouring in and out about the tables and counters is a steady stream of prospectors, miners, brokers, sightseers and newspaper men. The speech is rough, but the men are happy.

There is always a good group hanging around Frank Horton, Sr., when he is in Weepah, and he is accepted as being the father of the camp; for it is he who has been trying to "sell" that particular section of the country for a long time. Having won and lost one big fortune he handles his work now with admirable capability. The sudden visions of wealth and the immense quantities of mail offering him help do not bother him in the least. He is always the same jovial man each day.

Each day Horton takes a trip out to the camp to see that everything runs smoothly there. He listens to the fickle praise of those who come to Weepah, and attends to his duties on the ground until early evening. Back in Tonopah at night he smilingly rejects more offers to help him, and at the same time listens gravely to the plans of others who are eager to show him how he can make a fortune.

Young Horton and Leonard Traynor do not say much. They answer all questions as courteously as possible, and then return to their prospector friends to do their talking.

Thirteen Sacks of Ore.

Up on the side of the hill where the cut has exposed the gold ore are 13 sacks of ore. They weigh approximately 80 pounds each and have an estimated value of somewhere between $50,000 and $100,000, according to the elder Horton. These are left for public inspection each day, and at night they are placed in the cut once more, covered with an old wagon top and guarded by a man who sleeps there.

No work is being done on the pocket or vein of ore for two reasons. One is that there is a possibility of its petering out, and the other is that people are looking at it most of the time.

Although there is no established law in the camp at Weepah, there is a very trustful attitude among the residents there. Stories concerning claim jumpers are sent out occasionally, but such cases are few and far between. The average man who has lived in the desert for any length of time realizes the value of helping rather than hurting the other fellow, and he lives by that rule. His tent is always open to any one who may need it or anything in it.

Whether or not Weepah will prove to be a camp great enough to produce millionaires in the same manner that Tonopah, Goldfield, Virginia City and other famous Nevada towns did is at this stage of the game problematical. Until enough work can be done in the field to prove that the district is a really rich one there is always the doubt that it may be just a "flimfer."

Ten cents for the whole story, "With the Clock Turned Back."

Al. G. Barnes' Circus Coming to Eugene Tuesday, May Seventeenth.

Advertising agents representing Al. G. Barnes circus have been posting pictorial circus bills in this vicinity announcing the coming of this excellent show, and advertisements will be found in our columns this week. The management of the Al. G. Barnes Circus announces the following features this year:

The all new spectacle entitled, "Aladdin and the Parade of Gold," in which approximately 1,000 people take part, including the Chinese beauty, Lola Lee Chong; the Chinese giant, Liu Yu-Ching, the biggest man on earth; Klunkerts, equestrian midgets, fourteen tiny horsemen from Bavaria; San Marcus, the $16,000 equine star; the zebra round-up, with the largest herd in captivity in America; and many other novel features and performances given by American and foreign artists, and animals from every part of the world.

Two performances are given daily—the afternoon starting at 2 o'clock, and the night performance at 8 o'clock. The doors are open one hour previous for the inspection of the largest traveling zoo in America, and for the children to see the Chinese exhibit in which Liu Yu-Ching and his suite hold a reception.

The Al. G. Barnes Circus has always enjoyed an excellent reputation, giving universal satisfaction to all their patrons. Admission, adults 75c, children 50c.

Man's Debt to Books

God be thanked for books! They are the voices of the distant and the dead, and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages. Books are the true levelers. They give to all who will faithfully use them the society, the spiritual presence of the best and greatest of our race.—William Ellery Channing.
