WINS PURE BRED HOLSTEIN CALF

Edgar Grimes of Harrisburg Walks Off With Honors

Edgar Grimes, of Harrisburg, was awarded a pure bred Holstein calf at the state fair by Jacob Lasher and sons of Fairview. The calf was offered as a premium to the highest scoring Holstein club member on the basis of 25 per cent each for animal, herdsman, showmanship and record.

Grimes' score was 75 for the animal, 92 for herdsman, 100 for showmanship and 96 for record. His score on the animal was not as high as other contestants but his entire score exceeded that of his nearest competitor by 33.8. Eighteen club members contested for this honor.

"Five pure bred Holsteins are owned by Grimes, who has been a loyal club worker for the last seven years," says J. L. Allen, in charge of boys and girls club, livestock division, for Oregon Agricultural college. "He is local leader of the Linn county Holstein Calf club, and was in charge of the club's exhibit totaling 14 animals. These animals were exhibited at the Linn and Clackamas county fairs and the state fair."

The club under the leadership of Grimes competed in the open class in the county herd contest at the state fair, which required an exhibit of ten animals, and placed second. This same group of animals will be exhibited at the Pacific International Exposition in Portland beginning October 29th. All of the six members of this club are brothers and sisters. Grimes is 17 years old.

Linn Boys Receive Honors on Fine Stock at State Fair

Edward S. Brown of Shedd took first prize in the Jersey junior female class at the state fair last week with one of five animals and also, Edgar Grimes of Harrisburg won a Holstein calf for the highest scoring animal of that breed. These young Linn county farmers are setting an example of higher efficiency that will be a profit and advantage in a few short years.

The troubles and pains which we contemplate are generally far more serious than those which we have experienced. I am to have a tooth extracted tomorrow, and I shudder at the thought, and yet as I recall the dental experiences which I have previously gone through, I found them not nearly so dreadful as I had anticipated. I am to meet an angry and disgruntled parent this afternoon, who will have come five hundred miles to voice his dissatisfaction at the way his offspring has been mentally man-handled by his instructors and the administration generally. I dread the ordeal, and yet I know I shall get through it quite amicably when the moment arrives.

Elizabeth had come down from the country to enter high school. She had never been away from home alone before, and the people young and old whom she was to meet next day were all strangers to her. The subjects she was to take up were new and strange; the methods of teaching were to be quite unfamiliar to her. Her face took on a very serious look as we sat quietly before the fire in the dusk of Sunday evening. There were tears in her eyes as she turned to me, and a tremor in her voice.

"Won't tomorrow be an awful day?" she said. It was the terror of the unknown and the inexperienced which was taking hold of her. When she met it, she found that her fears had been for nothing. She had had a very happy day she announced when she came home at night, and through the years that followed, the experience continued. When it was through there were tears in her eyes again because the experience which she had so dreaded was over.

Mack was going out to a new job. He had worked hard in college and had undertaken a number of things which he had carried to a conclusion very successfully. He was to try something entirely new this time in a distant city which he had never yet seen. His heart failed him a little. "Tell me what to do," he asked. "How shall I meet the new situation?" "The new job," I explained, "is going to be very little different from the old ones you have had. People are about the same wherever you find them. Make yourself useful and necessary to the people for whom you are working, and you will get on; and, above all, be yourself."

Mack is getting on. The terror of the inexperienced left him shortly, and he is as much at home on the new job as he used to be on the old. I wonder often, as most of us do, I imagine, how I shall meet the great change which comes at the end of life. My father used to say when he thought of the "last judgment," "That will be an awful day," but he went very peacefully as if he were drooping off to sleep. His terror of the unknown vanished.

Value of Newspaper Recognized By Big Business Concerns

The secretary of a large building and loan association recommends newspaper advertising as the most effective and economical means of reaching the public and urges the associations throughout the United States to create a fund of $1,000,000 for such a campaign.

As Mr. Anderson knows, it has been fully demonstrated that the newspaper stands by itself as a carrier of messages to the greatest possible number of people. It is the only medium that is sure to reach the citizens of a community and be read. This fact is being more fully appreciated every day.

Country weeklies are the greatest medium for reaching the real buying power.

OREGON FLAX NOW GOING TO IRELAND

First Seed Came West Over Old Oregon Trail

Oregon flax is now being shipped to Ireland. With 209 bales of flax spinning tow clearing for Dublin, Ireland, last Saturday aboard the steamer Steel Scientist, the total exports of this commodity have reached a total of 247,736 pounds with a value in excess of $25,000.

Since the movement started in August of this year, four parcels have been shipped to Ireland from the state flax plant at Salem. Early in the year samples were forwarded to Belfast for examination and testing purposes, and the quality of the tow produced in this territory has proven equal to the best grown in other countries.

Seed for the first flax grown in the Willamette valley was brought in over the Old Oregon Trail in the early forties and at that time those interested in the growing of the flax found that a very good fibre could be produced from the straw even with crude tools that were then available. Time has proven that the cool moist climate to be found in Oregon particularly west of the Cascades, is ideal for the cultivation of flax, and the long, cool, moist growing season with a dry period for harvest produces an excellent fibre flax.

During the year 1927, approximately 4,000 acres of land was devoted to the cultivation of flax, being approximately double the amount seeded to flax during previous years. The increase is largely due to the operation of the state flax plant at Salem, being located near the center of the flax producing area of the Willamette valley, delivery may be made direct from the field to the mill.

The Sour-Milk Microbe

A very small microbe which gets into milk turns the sugar particles of milk into an acid, and it is then that we say that milk is sour. These microbes are not harmful, but others which are likely to develop at the same time may prove injurious.
