Now comes a cry from the large buyers of cheap labor to let down the bars on immigration from Mexico and camouflage their cry by ringing that same old alarm bell, "the farmer needs more cheap labor." We'd like to get a hold on some of the "shortage of labor," calamity howlers and take 'em for a short walk down Burnside street in Portland most any time where they could man any job their limited executive ability could wade through, with dependable help. The farmer isn't asking for cheap labor, it's too expensive to fuss around with. The plea winds up thus: "Keep the common labor ports of Mexico open. Close them and the industrial West will be paralyzed to its center." Come on paralysis!

A survey of a wagon road from Springfield to Coburg and then to a point at or near Alford station where it will connect with the state highway, is being strongly agitated and promises to be a reality in a year or so. The right-of-way will be 60 feet wide and construction according to market road specifications. Such a road would be of great help to the farmers of that section.

There is consolation to the users of a certain popular "roll-your-own" tobacco in the news item that profits from its sale are to build a university. Twenty million dollars will be expended in this monument.

Dempsey says he's a better man than Tunney. Of course when he says "better man" the definition does not extend beyond the prize ring and we doubt even that far.
