This Seems to Be the How of It

Student influence on college names is not at all modern, according to a group of "old timers" at O. S. C., who have divulged the information the familiar initials, O. A. C. were originated by students making a college yell some eight years after the college became a state institution. When Bill Bloss introduced football to the college in 1892 it was decided a college yell was also necessary, so the famous "Zip Boom Bee" yell was made, using "S. A., S. A., S. A. C." This sounded so much like a person hissing, says Dr. Fulton, that it was decided to substitute Oregon for state, thus making the initials O. A. C. The full name, "State Agricultural College of the State of Oregon" is still used on salary check blanks and some other legal forms.

Don't fail to see "All of a Sudden Peggy." She's bringing a fine lot of young folks along with her and we know you will like them.
