From Our Regular Correspondents

Saturday evening Mrs. J. A. Miller and Mrs. Karl Bramwell planned a surprise for Mrs. Florence Leeper whose birthday was Sunday, by preparing and taking a birthday dinner to her home. Two large birthday cakes were a part of the dinner. Those enjoying the dinner and the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Bramwell and children and Mrs. Leeper and son.

Honoring Mrs. Florence Leeper whose birthday was Sunday Mrs. Frank Leeper entertained a group of relatives at a turkey dinner at her home in this city. Dinner was served at 1:30 o'clock. A color scheme of pink and white was used. The table was centered with a large birthday cake covered with white frosting and ornamented with pink rosebuds. Places were marked for Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Miller, Francis Leeper, Sidney Leeper, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Leeper and the honor guest.

Here is Siam, once owned by the king of Siam, as he appeared on his arrival in New York. The royal meow just returned from Europe following a visit which included many airplane flights. He planned to look over New York and perhaps tour the country.

KEEPING YOUR END UP

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

WE WERE taught very distinct moral lessons in the old reader which we used in the public school when I was learning to read, and especially were these lessons emphasized without subtlety or suggestiveness in the texts which were given to copy in our writing books. The fact that I cannot at this moment recall any one of them suggests that they did not eat themselves into my memory very deeply. There was one story however, which I still recall with some distinctness. Possibly it was the illustration which accompanied it which left its impress upon me. Two boys were carrying a heavy basket suspended from a pole which rested upon their shoulders. The cleverer of the two discovered that by pushing the basket nearer to his companion he lightened his own load. It was a laboratory experiment in physics and in fair dealing. The lesson as I recall was that everyone is under obligation when he assumes a responsibility of any sort, to keep up his end of the load.

Most of us have a good many poles upon our shoulder, placed there by the society in which we move or the business in which we are engaged. Or possibly it might be more accurate to say that there are a good many bases for the Christmas tree where the members exchanged their gifts with the spirit which we hope will extend through the years. Mrs. McLaren served a delicious lunch to the members seated around a long table decorated with a miniature tree for the center piece. Everyone had a most enjoyable time.

The Potter sewing club was entertained by Mrs. M. M. Fruit Wednesday afternoon when several of the members enjoyed a pleasant afternoon, but missed the company of so many of their members, one in the hospital at Albany, one in the Emmanuel hospital in Portland and several were absent on account of sickness. Mrs. Fruit served a dainty lunch assisted by Mrs. Martha Abrahams and Mrs. Ella Lamar.

sets on the pole, one end of which we are helping to carry.

There are the schools in the town in which we live. Even though we are far beyond school age and may not have anyone in our family for whose education we are responsible, we would be very sorry not to have a good school system in our community. But here, I am sometimes afraid, we shove the basket over toward the end of the pole which the school board is supporting, or toward those who seem more closely concerned with school affairs and walk along carrying a very light weight of educational responsibility. We don't feel much call to keep up our end of the load.

There's the church, too. Of course, we believe in the church, and we wouldn't live in a town without one. We are strong for it, all of us, but too often we let the women or those who seem to have nothing else to do look after the church. Maybe we chip in occasionally when the every-member canvass is on—maybe we feel too many other obligations pressing—but we are inclined to slip the basket toward the other end of the pole.

There is the political situation; there is the failure of those in authority to enforce the laws. We don't like the way things are going, but we have elected officials to take charge of these matters—some of us at least voted at the last election—and it is their business to carry the load—so we push the basket slyly in their direction.

What a wonderful world it would be if every one would see to it that he kept his end up.

The Coconut Crab

There is a certain kind of crab which lives on coconuts. The largest of the crab family, he makes a home for himself among the roots of the coconut tree and lives conveniently near the source of supply. As much as a quart of pure oil is obtained from these crabs as a result of this coconut diet.
