Costume Ensemble of Smart French Beige

This smart French beige costume ensemble, worn by May McAvoy, Warner Bros. star, consists of a simple two-piece satin frock and a velvet coat. The collar and border are of red fox, and there is a trimming of metallic brocade above the border.

their meeting at the school house Friday afternoon. Following the close of the business hour a social time was enjoyed during which Willard Keen and Alfred Babcock served refreshments. Edna and Ardella Falk were complimented guests.

Saturday afternoon the LaFrance sewing club members met at the H. J. Falk home with Nellie and Pearl Falk as hostesses. During the social hour taffy was served. The next meeting of this club will be held at the A. L. Falk home.

Friday afternoon a number of the young people of this neighborhood met and organized a cooking club. Milton Elliott was elected president, Ardella Falk vice president, Richard Harding secretary and Edna Falk leader. Other members of the club are Luella Falk, Alice Harding, Charles Falk and Harry Harding. Several others expect to join later.

LAKE CREEK

The members of the Lake Creek and Bucay club met at the home of Mrs. S. J. Holloway Wednesday afternoon of last week. As the birthdays of two of the members, Mrs. William Cook and Mrs. Holloway, occur in January they were specially honored at this time and were the recipients of many pretty gifts. During the afternoon conversation and games were pleasing diversions, and the delightful afternoon was brought to a close by the serving of delicious refreshments by Mrs. Rosa Cook and Mrs. John Evans, assisted by several others. Fifteen were present for the afternoon.

READJUSTMENTS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

WE ARE, as I have often remarked, the slaves of habit, good or bad. The older we are the more difficult it is to readjust ourselves to new conditions, to take on new friends, and to be happy in new surroundings. Winter or summer, at work or during vacation, I awake at about the same hour, and try as I will I cannot long be contented. I must be up and at something. It is a habit I learned, with difficulty I must admit, long ago on the farm, but, having learned it, I am a slave to it. I want the same things for breakfast. Wherever I am, I am a little uneasy unless I am in my own chair. I am contented only when I have my old friends about me. And yet I know full well that one should learn to be and to do otherwise, for sooner or later readjustments will have to be made. Old friends will have to go; new conditions will arise; and the wise man will learn to make readjustments early in life.

Wilder is a bachelor who has always had means enough to live as he desired. He has always intended to marry, but he is past fifty now and he is afraid of the readjustments which he knows will be inevitable in his life if he takes on the responsibilities of married life. She might want breakfast earlier or later than he has been accustomed to; she might not find his friends as agreeable as he finds them; she might even appropriate his favorite chair or insist upon its being replaced by a more artistic though less comfortable one. There is too much risk, and he will very likely drift on and die as he now is. Selfish you will say he is, but his habits are formed.

Gregory, though he is an old man, has just lost his mother. During his seventy years he has scarcely been separated from her. He has a wife and a family of his own and is a self-reliant and successful man, but there has always been mother to go to when he was depressed or in trouble or felt the need of sympathy. He is as completely lost as a child without her. He wanders about like a stranger in a strange land, not knowing what to do or where to go. He knew that the change must come, sooner or later, but he had not prepared himself for it.

Fuller and his wife were inseparable. He was a shy man, who held himself in the background in social affairs. No one else could bring him out or put him in as good light as she could do. He quite sparkled when she was about, but without her he was silent, ill-at-ease, and not at his best. She died suddenly when still a young woman, but he could not make the readjustments necessary to a life without her. He was like a vessel drifting helplessly in a heavy sea. He followed her in a few months. He had never learned to make readjustments.
