In conversation with one of Halsey's best and most progressive business men the other day, in which the city's future was discussed, the question came up as to what benefit a commercial club would be, and he expressed the belief that such an organization would do more in a constructive way than anything that could be adopted as we would then be in close touch with the growth and welfare of the state. It is a question the Enterprise would like to see acted upon.

Lindbergh recently applied for a renewal of his commercial flying license and in answering the usual questionnaire he stated that he had made 7,800 flights, totaling 2,520 hours in the air in flying 700,000 miles and had carried 7,000 passengers. It was decided he was qualified.

Four women in Boston were arrested and fined in a single day for wearing skirts "indecently short." Some judges lack all sense of humor.

The Chinese won a national anthem. We suggest, "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight." That's the tune that pacified the Filipino.

After all, Judge Rand is a bigger man today.

Blinders for Grapefruit

The Junction City Times comes to the rescue of grape fruit addicts who have been trying for several years to extract the fluid content from one half of one of them at a morning meal as an antidote, without suffering defeat from a shot in the eye. This is the device: "A hood of waxed paper, which being flexible, can be fitted to a grapefruit of any size. Fastened around the bottom of the hood, on the inside is a reinforcing strip whose ends project some inches forward.

"The ends of the strip carry a little spike (furnished) that points inward. Thus, when the hood is so adjusted as partly to encircle the halved grapefruit, it is secured by pressing the spikes into the rind. Further, to secure the hood in position, a tab attached to the middle of the lower edge of the hood (at back of latter) is provided with a third little spike to be likewise pushed into the rind of the fruit.

"With the spatter shield properly placed in position the inventor assures the diner that he is fully protected from an unexpected squirt of juice."

OUR CLIMATE COMPARED

By Thomas ARKLE CLARK, Dean of Men, University Illinois

IT WAS raining when I went to sleep at night and raining still when I waked in the morning—a gentle but persistent rain that pattered on the windows and soothed me into a sound sleep like distant music. It gave me a quiet, peaceful feeling. It was like taking a sedative for jangling nerves. I knew that I should enjoy going out in it and feeling the soft mist upon my face. Going out into a rain never gives me a chill or a cold or a feeling of injustice or irritation. I like it.

I knew, however, that if I should by chance meet Mrs. Griswold—she comes from Florida, where I almost froze to death last Christmas because I had somewhere gotten the idea that Florida has a warm climate, and had worn light clothing when I went down—she would begin: "What terrible weather you have here! Does it do nothing else but rain? It seems to me we haven't had a day of sunshine since I struck this spot."

I tell her that she should take up her residence in central Spain, where for centuries they have developed a system of dry farming; where the sun shines seven days in the week and the air is constantly full of thick yellow dust. She would like it there I know.

There is nothing else with which I am familiar that people are so sensitive to as the weather, and nothing of which they so thoroughly approve as the climate with which they were early in life familiar.

was the father of J. P. Templeton, and an uncle of Mrs. W. R. Kirk.

Kenneth VanNise of Salem spent Saturday night here at the home of his brother, Merwyn, and Sunday morning drove to Alsea to visit his sister Ellen who is teaching school there. Her school closes next Friday.

Mrs. Jenkins was born and brought up in Texas. Unless you are thrashing about in the Gulf of Mexico you will find the climate of Texas comfortably warm during the summer months—in fact hot.

We had a few warm days in September—this is a locality in which corn is one of the staple products and warm weather in September is essential to the proper ripening of the corn—pleasant days I thought them, for the nights were cool. Mrs. Jenkins nearly suffocated. She had seldom gone through anything so trying. This climate of ours she simply cannot get used to.

"Now in Minnesota," Mrs. Smith tells us, "we have wonderful winters!"

I am sure it must be true for I came closer to freezing to death during a short visit to Duluth one summer than at any other time in my life. She goes on to say that when it gets cold it stays cold. Eleven months winter and one month late in the fall, one admirer has defined it. Here on the other hand we never know one day what we are going to be up against the next. Change, variety, the unexpected, no monotony! As they say out in California no matter what may happen—"That's what I like about it."

In England it rains every day; in Spain it never rains. In California there is eternal sunshine, and in Alaska twelve months of winter. Here we have all varieties of weather within a week. I like it.

The United States, with a comparatively small percentage of the earth's population produces 40% of the electricity generated.
