

CALAPOOIA ROUND-UP AND CELEBRATION JULY 3-4

Two Days Program Offered Of Roping, Bucking Horses, Etc.

Brownsville, June 6—Duncan McKercher, president of the Calapooia Round-Up association, announces that the two day racing program with excellent roping, bucking horses and miscellaneous events will be fully on a par with the eight annual round-ups that have heretofore drawn hundreds of enthusiasts to Crawfordville, says Earl E. Starnard of Brownsville.

The dates are the third and the fourth of July. Good cash prizes are to be offered the winners in all events.

Crawfordville is situated in the foothills of the Cascade mountains about seven miles above Brownsville on the Calapooia river. It is about twelve miles from the Pacific highway at Halsey, and is located on the good road which connects with Santiam Pass highway at Sweet Home. Campers and motorists in great number visit the round-up each year, making the event a vacation outing. Not a few of them go on eastward across the mountains for an eastern Oregon trip.

SOCIETY NEWS

From Our Regular Correspondents

Interest in social circles this week have centered around the plans for the reception to be given Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Penland in honor of their golden wedding anniversary. A large number of relatives and friends from other places are expected to be present.

Thursday evening Superintendent and Mrs. Lyman W. Patton entertained the members of the senior class of the high school at their home in East Halsey. Games and contests, interspersed with radio music, made the evening pass all too quickly and at a late hour the hostess served light refreshments.

Enjoying this pleasant evening were Hope Hussey, Edith Smith, Mary Smith, Esther Seefeld, Nora Coldiron, Elias Robin, Carl Sperling, Henry Kirk, Carl Isom, Mac McCord, Charles Wright, and the host and hostess.

Tuesday evening after the show a group of friends went to the home of Charles Hamer and surprised him, the affair having been planned in honor of his birthday, and to say the least, Charlie was surprised as he had expected them earlier in the evening. A social time was enjoyed and ice cream and cake was served.

Those present were Messrs and Mesdames Frank Gansle, D. C. Rossman and Lake, Leita Gansle Fern Rossman and Mr. and Mrs. Hamer.

Mrs. Genevieve Kendall was a hostess of Wednesday afternoon when she extended the hospitality of her home in North Albany to the members of the Past Noble Grand club of Halsey.

Sewing and conversation were the diversions of the afternoon, at the close of which the hostess, assisted by her sister, Miss Goldia Wells, served a two course luncheon.

Those answering to roll call were Mesdames Karl Bramwell, J. A. Miller, George Taylor, E. A. P. LaFollette, George Laubner, O. W. Fum, Bert Clark, A. E. True, B. M. Bond, E. E. Gormley, W. H.

WHAT FARM SETTLERS MAY EXPECT TO FIND IN OREGON

In a recent issue of Oregon Business appears an article by F. L. Ballard entitled, "What Farm Settlers May Expect to find in Oregon." Here in part is what he has to say:

"What does the new settler find in Oregon?"

"I have been asked that question many times in many states. A catalogue-like list of Oregon wonders easily take shape and expand upon briefest reflection. No space here, however, for attempted description of the mountains, lakes, streams and beaches. But briefly I always say Oregon is a good place in which to live. To the farmer in particular there are, of course, other considerations of special interest, and these will be briefly touched upon.

"No discussion of Oregon's farm resources can be complete without mention of the widely varying climatic and topographical conditions under which the farming business is conducted. Farming under 80 inches and more of rainfall on the coast; farming successfully under 11 inches, mostly from winter rains and snows, in the Columbia basin; farming at sea level and at 5000 feet; farming where drainage is a positive requirement; farming where irrigation is equally a requirement, all successfully done under all these conditions in various parts of this single state.

"One year at Christmas I was in Wallowa county. It was zero and below. Sleighs and sleds were squeaking tensely over a foot or more of well packed snow, and the trees and wires were bending under the weight of snow and ice. Except for the shining mountains it might have been New York state. Three days later I was at the opposite corner of the state, in Clatsop county, and there the herds were contentedly pasturing on summer-like meadows. The sweet peas and nasturtiums had not yet frosted down and the air was that of May in eastern states.

"A fair place in which to dwell, while to be desired, must have in addition substantial economic opportunity to attract the settler. Analysis of Oregon's agriculture shows it in favorable light except in volume. For instance, taxes are high, but no higher than in many other substantial farming regions. Land values compare favorably with values anywhere. Returns on capital invested compare as favorably with returns on capital invested in like enterprises elsewhere and so on.

Oregon's one limitation is volume, due partly to the inherent limitations of the state as to the number of tillable acres, and partly to the fact that as compared with some states the utilization of large masses of capital in agricultural production has lagged somewhat. Larger volume of crops probably would increase the effectiveness of cooperative marketing. In this connection, the new settler will find marked progress being made in Oregon in facilitating marketing to best possible advantage.

"Situated 2000 to 3000 miles from the main consuming centers and producing a surplus of all the staple agricultural products grown, with the exception of corn, pork and sugar, and a large surplus of many specialties, just how to sell this surplus product is indeed a question. Forward steps in the solution, however, have removed the pith of the difficulty. A first step has been the trend toward growing the products for which there is an established market. Examples are dairy products, with an excellent and spreading market in California; wool and mutton, with excellent fairly permanent market outlooks; late pears, which meet competition from two states only; and, in increasing volume, small seed, a highly concentrated product on which shipping costs are comparatively low.

"Then there are highly developed cooperative marketing enterprises. A number of cooperative dairy marketing associations are successful. Outstanding is the Tillamook County Creamery association, which to a degree is a realization of countless farmers' dreams of cooperation. There, well over 90 per cent of the county's total agricultural production is sold by one man, and standardized production, intelligent advertising and aggressive management have developed a nationally known enterprise. There are others, for instance, the regional wool and egg marketing associations with headquarters in Portland, and in Lane county, another of the state's outstanding examples of farmers' cooperation, a county in which approximately one fifth of the entire cooperative marketing business of the state is accomplished. New settlers, and many long time residents as well, can look to Lane county as a region of progressive production practices and successful farmers' marketing enterprises.

"The new settler, because of the enumerated advantages and others faces agricultural opportunity in Oregon equal to any and superior to most.
