

Oregon Dairy Herds Top National List for 1926-27

Oregon with 172 dairy herds in improvement associations for 1926-27 made the highest record of the 31 states engaged in such work according to a report received from the United States department of agriculture by N. C. Jamison, extension specialist in dairying at the state college who is in charge of the work. Of the Oregon herds in the improvement work, 66.2 per cent averaged above 300 pounds of butterfat a year.

Idaho was next in the list with 63.2 per cent above 300 pounds while next in order were Michigan, Ohio, West Virginia, Indiana and Nebraska. Wisconsin led the states in number of herds in the associations, having 2,904, with Michigan second. Oregon is fourteenth in this list and Georgia last.

The average for the U. S. of 11,370 herds in these improvement associations is 7410 pounds of 4 per cent milk per cow or 295 lbs. of butterfat.

Ladino Clover Excellent Producer

Ladino clover, a new giant white variety which originated in Italy, is proving a pasture crop of real value to Oregon dairymen and sheep raisers. Introduced into this state by county agents back in 1922 Ladino clover has thrived equally well on moist lands in the Willamette valley, irrigated areas of eastern Oregon and tide lands in the coast counties.

In the Willamette valley this new clover has done best on moist bottom lands and fields that were irrigated. Ample moisture seems to be its major requirements, say county agents and when that requirement is met it will produce more feed than any other pasture crop yet developed.

Under irrigation Ladino clover will carry from three to four cows
