Secretary Hoover in his speech accepting the nomination for the presidency referred to some of the indications of American progress, one of which was the fact that during the past eight years 3,000,000 more homes have been equipped with electricity.

Naturally most of these homes were in cities and towns, but during the past four or five years great strides have been made toward extending electricity to the rural districts as well.

In a majority of the states of the Union, as well as in many sections of Canada, a practical program of rural electrification is being worked out. This program is generally pursued through the cooperation of agricultural colleges, farmer organizations and electric companies and no problem of the electrical industry is today receiving more attention than that of bringing electric service to the farms and farm homes.

While the resulting benefits have been general, they have perhaps meant most to those farm women whose daily burdens have been lightened through the introduction into their homes of electric light, heat and power. Every new rural electric line which threads its way across the countryside means emancipation from drudgery for many farm housewives.

Last Monday was Labor Day. While primarily a day of parades and exercises by organized labor, the festivities are participated in largely by the general public and business is usually suspended to a considerable extent. American labor is the most productive in the world, as well as the best paid and best protected. Employers and the public have learned that prosperity for the workman contributes to the prosperity of all. The high achievements of those who perform the nations everyday tasks are fittingly commemorated on Labor Day.

Starting on a lecture tour of the world, Alfred O. Reimann, a 1927 graduate of O.S.C. left for New York to sail October 16 for England, his first stop. Reimann will feature the Pacific northwest in his talks which will be illustrated with slides and motion pictures obtained through the courtesy of the state college, various railway companies and chambers of commerce. He expects to return to Corvallis next spring to finish up his work for a master's degree.

Another promising development which will tend to free America from foreign domination in the rubber market is reported by the National Farm News Exchange, which gives an account of experiments with the Mexican guayule shrub, which is really a weed. By crushing the whole shrub and mechanically and chemically processing the pulp it is said that 14 to 16 percent of rubber, which meets all commercial tests, is obtained.

The consolidation of school districts is being taken up by two wide awake districts not far from Halsey and in one of the most progressive neighborhoods. This is a move forward both educationally and financially.

Some of the newspapers are suggesting the consolidation of counties. Consolidation and cooperation go hand in hand to the betterment of all.

At Rickreal a mill is being converted into a dance hall. The next step should be to make golf courses of the wheat fields.

Efforts are still being made to get the two Dunne measures off the ballot but so far nothing effective has been accomplished.

Children's Eyes Should Be Tested

The children will soon be starting to school for the winter term. You should have their eyes examined by a Specialist. Do they suffer with the headache? Do their eyes itch, burn or run water? Do they hold their work too close to their eyes? You should see a specialist that is carefully trained in this work.

Dr. Curtis has been taking care of the students of the Oregon Agricultural College very successfully for the past seventeen years, and still doing the good work that students require. After first fitting, all changes for one year are made without extra charge.
