Canning Now a Science

WHO invented the modern canning process? About 8,000,000,000 cans of processed foods are now put up in the United States every year, and most of them are consumed by the American people. Since the canning industry has grown to such gigantic proportions scientists have been working on every aspect of it, and commercial canning has become a science. Scientists have not only done this, but they have delved into the interesting past history of canning. Dr. A. W. Bitting, formerly associated with the National Canning Association laboratories at Washington, D. C., has collected all the data on the subject available—about 1200 volumes from the year 1500 to date, some of which were prepared from manuscripts prior to the Christian era.

In a communication quoted by "Wrangler" in the "Canning Trade," Dr. Bitting says in part:

"I am convinced that Nicholas Appert was the man who discovered the art of preserving food by treating the same with heat and holding it in a hermetically sealed container. I believe his title is as clear in this respect as that of Morse for the telegraph, Bell for the telephone, or Edison for his numerous inventions. It is true that Appert was not the first to preserve foods by what we term canning. He never made such a claim. That was done after a fashion for two hundred years before his time. But no one knew why it kept sometimes and spoiled at others. The closest approach to the work of Appert is that of Denis Papin about a hundred and twenty-five years before."

planned a circus for the winners, at the city hall Friday evening.

As a result of the contest the school will receive 50 cents for each subscription.

John Miller was leader. Herman Koontz was high man.

NOTICE

Friday evening the regular meeting of the Parent Teacher association will be held at the school house. Mrs. Grace Vannice the recently elected president, and Mrs. Lenora Kizer the new secretary, will fill their offices for the first time.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCEWhat Is a Light Year?

A light year is six trillions of miles; it is the distance light travels in one year at the rate of 186,300 miles a second. A ray of light requires 200,000 years to cross our stellar system. No one can ever make the trip in a shorter time because the speed of light is the fastest speed of anything.
