When you buy of the stores of Beaverton you get the goods at a fair price, plus the personal interest of the merchant, which is usually worth a considerable percentage on the goods.

USING THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS
The business men in the cities make a specialty nowadays of studying the achievements of other communities and imitating them. If a progressive thing is done in one city, it is likely to be soon imitated all over the country.

The country towns should be equally alert to pick up progressive ideas. Some country people are inclined to say, when it is suggested that they should try out an idea that has worked well in rural communities in other states, that conditions are entirely different in their home section, and that the same idea could not be worked. Country life will make much more rapid progress if such ideas are readily accepted and quickly spread from one locality to another.

FINDING WORK FOR STUDENTS
The Sioux City, Iowa, Chamber of Commerce is doing a useful thing by establishing a list of all students who would like to earn some money. It is hoped that the service rendered by this list will enable many young people to keep on with their studies.

Many young people would go to school longer if the problem of paying expenses could be solved. Often there is work they could do which people want to have done. One good way to get such work is to advertise in The Beaverton Review.

The business men of the place help on the cause of education every time they give part time work to such a student. Many who have been helped this way have assisted to splendid careers of usefulness.

ENGLISH WOMEN TO LEARN HOW TO MAKE PAPER-GUMMED DRESS FORMS

Gummed-Paper Dress Forms Are Aid to Home Sewing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

As a result of a recent visit to the United States Department of Agriculture, an Englishwoman has become so keenly interested in the making of gummed-paper dress forms as an aid to home sewing, that she intends to introduce this labor-saving device to English housewives as soon as she returns, through the medium of women's institutes. Miss Minnie Zimmerman, the visitor, is president of the Loughton Women's Institute in Essex, near London, which has about 370 members. As there are over 2,000 similar local women's institutes scattered throughout England, and as it is required that members "give as well as get" instruction in practical new ways of doing things, the paper dress form seems likely to be taken up widely in England as it has been in the United States. Thousands of women in this country, especially those in rural districts who cannot home demonstration agents on their return after completing scholarship courses of training in England. These agents will go to the Loughton Women's Institute to learn home making and other leather work, and give, in return, demonstrations in making paper dress forms, bottling pectin extracts and packing one or two attractive canned products.

Aim of English Institutes.
In describing before a group of extension specialists the plan and scope of the women's institutes in England, Miss Zimmerman explained that the aim of these organizations is social as well as educational. Women of various interests and in different walks of life are urged to join them for the sake of community solidarity. The regular meetings are social in nature, including lectures, pageants, historical, musical and dramatic entertainments, folk and period dancing and similar features in which all can participate. In addition there are a great variety of classes conducted in which any woman, who wishes to, can learn to do or make something which saves expenditure or by which she can earn money. Such work as making rush seats, gloves, bags, upholstery, umbrella covers, blouses, white-washing or soldering is in great demand. The institutes resemble extension work in that voluntary local leaders do a great deal of the actual instruction. They attend special training classes at their own expense and must pass tests before they can qualify as instructors. One-half of the expense of conducting the institutes is raised locally, the remainder is borne by the British department of agriculture, but the state support is to be withdrawn.

Fixed Annual Charge.
The institutes differ from our extension groups in that a fixed annual charge of 2 shillings is made, and there are other small fees for class instruction and for any refreshments served at meetings. Apparently no meetings occur, either in the daytime or evening, without the customary English cup of tea, but the usual charge of 3 pence seems to be cheerfully met by all of the many members who find that both the social and educational aspects of the institutes add much to their enjoyment of life.

get help with their sewing, have made dress forms according to instructions given by extension agents so that they can fit their own clothes more easily and remodel old garments.

Exchange of Instruction.
Miss Zimmerman spent some time with extension and home economics workers in the department studying the organization of work for farm women, the methods used and subjects taught, with a view to adapting some of our ideas to English needs. An exchange of instruction was tentatively arranged for when three of our

THE ATMOSPHERE OF SUCCESS

If some day you saw a merchant clearing out some old equipment from his store, and putting in new and stylish fittings you might ask him what he was spending all that money for. It might appear as if the new outfit would not give him any more space or permit his store to hold any more goods.

But, he would probably say, "I need these things to give my store the atmosphere of success. The old stuff looked behind the times. I am putting out fine goods, and I want a setting for them that will seem in keeping with them. Otherwise people might gain a wrong impression of the character of my store."

If you asked a merchant who advertises consistently as to the reason why he spends that money, he would name various reasons. One of them quite likely would be somewhat along the line suggested above. He might truly remark that advertising gives a business an atmosphere of success.

When a store advertises freely, it conveys the idea that its managers are hustling and energetic people, who are never satisfied with what they have been able to achieve in the past but who are always pushing out to bigger things, and who have faith that their trade can be largely increased if they will strive for it.

That kind of impression helps a business, just as a new outfit of window fittings and show cases and store furniture ought to help it. It makes it look as if a business was going ahead at a rapid rate.

It would take considerable time for people to go through the stores of a city and make an exhaustive study of the lines and prices carried by the various places, so that they are governed to a large extent by the impressions given by such matters as equipment and advertising.

The idea of making milk the national drink is respectfully commended to motorists who drive rapidly.

Kale plants that came up volunteer last fall or in the February warm spell are not good for field setting this spring as they usually go to seed in the summer.

An over planting of corn is not likely this year in Oregon. There is room in the Northwest for twice the acreage grown in 1923. Plantings of this extent would avert the necessity for importing 1500 to 2000 carloads of corn from the corn belt into the northwest each year.

FARM REMINDERS

All seed potatoes should get the corrosive sublimate treatment before being planted.

Potatoes cut in ounce and a half to two ounce sizes have been found by the O. A. G. Experiment station to be best for planting, unless eyes are scarce.

Mid-April potato is generally best in the central and south Willamette valley districts. June planting is practiced to some extent in the north valley districts but it is doubtful whether results are so satisfactory.

Whole potatoes of medium size are best for rich land with irrigation or good summer rainfall, particularly where soils are cool and moist.

Do not feed moldy corn to brood sows. It may cause them to lose their pigs. An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure.

A few hogs will go a long way toward paying the bills on any farm, but too many will eat up all the profit. Base the number of hogs to be kept on the amount of waste available for hog feed.

A grafting wax which has been found the best for all purposes may be made at home as follows: resin, 5 lbs.; beeswax, 1 lb.; finely pulverized charcoal, 1.2 lb.; raw linseed oil, 1 gill. Melt beeswax over a slow fire, add charcoal, stirring, then the oil. Moulded bricks should be put in greased pans. The wax may be broken in lumps for use, and melted. Should be applied in liquid form.
