STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON SAVING TO INVEST

"You have talked so much about saving, Aunt Emmy," said Hilda to Aunt Emmy, "that I wonder if you will be kind enough to help Jack and me work out a way to save regularly. We do so want to get ahead. As Jack is getting a little more money this year, we plan to save that and keep right on living on what we got last year. Of course, it is hard to do without a lot of things we might have, but then Jack and I both feel that we don't want to be worried about money. If we have a little reserve fund, we can be prepared for emergencies."

"Bless my heart!" exclaimed Aunt Emmy. "It surely does sound good to hear such sensible talk from a youngster these days! I'll tell you what I think is a good plan for you to follow—open a savings account with a bank that has a thrift department and every week put away a stated sum in your savings account. You will receive interest on this money, you know. Of course you receive only a moderate rate of interest on your savings, so it is a good idea to make a definite investment plan and invest your savings in sound securities that will yield a higher rate of interest."

"Accumulate your money, small sums at a time, in your thrift or savings account. Determine what sum you will use for your initial investment, say, $100 or $500. Save until you have twice that amount. If you decide to begin your investment on $100 save $200, then take $100 and buy a baby bond, or buy a large bond on the installment plan and apply the $100 on the first payment, if you are sure you can save regularly enough to meet the other payments."

"Why not use the $200 and then begin all over again, Aunt?" queried Hilda.

"Because you ought to have some money on hand. You don't want to wipe out your whole savings, even for the best sort of investment."

"But how can we know what to invest in?" asked Hilda.

"Your bank will help you in that, my dear. Bankers are always glad to advise their customers concerning sound investments,"—Aunt B. Aymes.

Oiling has begun on The Dalles-California highway at Bend.

"ON A PIRATE SHIP"

(Second Installment)
(From the Beaverton Hummer)

I was rather doubtful as to the advisability of this, but, being of a trusting nature and adventurous spirit, I threw my doubts to the wind and walked unsteadily up the gangplank. When I stepped onto the deck, the captain gave orders to sail. Then he called down below and an old woman came on deck.

"Take this person to the den and be sure that the door is locked securely," he said.

At this I was very frightened but followed the old woman downstairs nevertheless.

"What's the grand idea?" I asked her, trying to sound as brave as possible. But my question was of no avail, for she said:

"Me no spikese de English," and further replies I could in no wise get from her.

We went past two doors and came to a great black iron door with a brass padlock and steel chain attached to it. She opened the door and was about to shove me in when I took a sudden aversion to the idea and dived into what appeared to be a small box. But it was a spring door and the minute I had entered the top came down with a bang and so did I. After I had recovered from the shock, I sat up and tried to gaze around, but the light was very poor and every corner loomed at me in thick black mystery. With much difficulty, I arose to my feet and walked toward a window. En route, I stumbled over some hard, rattly articles which I supposed were firewood. Also some round hard objects which I concluded were coal. So I had fallen into the coal bin. When I reached the window I ripped the curtain down. The late afternoon light filled the dungeon and I gave a screech of terror, for what I supposed was wood and coal were horrid blundered human skeletons. My trembling knees gave way under my horrorstricken person, and I collapsed in a pile of ribs, which issued forth a rattle which echoed and re-echoed with a horrid mocking sound.

How long I sat in this horrorstricken frame of mind I do not know, but finally I arose and gazed beyond the bones and saw a small cave-like door. I went to it and getting upon my knees, managed to crawl thru. I found myself in another room similar to the first but minus the skeletons. Over in the far corner was another door. I crawled through and found myself back in the pit of bones. I was very puzzled. I found another door which likewise led to another cave with a single exit. I went through and found myself back again in the pit of bones. As all roads lead to Rome, evidently all doors led to the bone pit. At last, I resigned myself to what Fate had destined for me, and looked around the room. In looking a bright metallic object caught my eye. I arose and advanced toward it, but it disappeared. I went back to the center of the room and looked again. There it was just as before. Slowly I crept toward it. I hit my knee upon a skull and cut my chin on a spinal column, but went on nevertheless. I reached for the shiny object and my hand closed upon a mass of bony fingers.

The muscles of my fingers stiffened in spasmodic fear, but after seeing so many horrors in one day, I had become brave and soon recovered from my fright. I held the remains of a hand to the light and discovered a small gold ring on the third finger. There was nothing unusual about the ring, it being a small gold band ring, commonly used in the wedding ceremony, to tie the fatal knot. I pulled the ring off and put it on my finger.

The sun was now very low in the west and cast very little light into my prison, as it grew darker without, a ghastly green light began to form in the dungeon. I was more afraid than curious, so I didn't investigate but sat and shivered in the clammy dampness and gloom. I was very weary and tired of it all, but saw no means of escape. I thought of the events of the day and remembered the wish I had made on the stump beside the stream.

"Oh, how I wish I were not here. Any place on earth would be preferable to this." Just as this thought formed itself, a small genie arose beside me from the mass of bones.

"I am the servant of the bearer of this wishing ring," he said in a solemn voice.

"You wished to be any place but here?" So saying he stooped and resurrected an iron ring from the mass and pulled on it, and a large gale opened in the floor under me. I fell down, it seemed miles to me, and finally my body was embraced by cold, icy water. Horrors! I had fallen into the sea! I opened my eyes to take a farewell look at the blue sky above.

I found I had merely fallen from the stump, during my dream and into the shallow water of the creek. I was wet and had a bump on my head, caused by the collision with a rock, but compared to the adventures of my dream, these were minor troubles.
