Men who dare the wide seas on far trips,
Who quest the corners of the world in white ships,
Garry dreams within their eyes and songs upon their lips.

But women lonely watch and wait the ship's return,
Trembling in the shadowed night their hearts yearn
With prayer, and in their eyes fear's fires burn.

Syverson After Year of Adverse Conditions Enjoys Season of Prosperity

Here on the Coast and in the West generally, they are called "Manchers." Back East they were known as "Farmers." The name does not make much difference. But almost everywhere there is a big howl going up that the farmer is not getting the returns he should from the capital he has invested and the amount of work he puts into his industry. He probably isn't.

But there is one rancher at least in this vicinity who isn't doing much howling. He always has a smile of welcome when you visit his place of business, just as any other successful businessman. He may admit that things might be a little better but he always adds that they might be a whole lot worse than they are.

Last year with a broken leg, his Logan berry crop destroyed by some blight or disease, his strawberries lost through the crown-borer, and a few other more or less important matters which seemed to go the wrong way, you would have thought he might be a little down-hearted; but to Mr. Syverson the world still looked bright, and this year, able to be about with a cane, he has enjoyed a very profitable year.

His ranch of about fifty-five acres lies on top of the hill, Cooper Mountain, south and west of Aloha. About forty acres are under cultivation. His Logan berry crop, of which he has several acres, this year netted him a little more than $500 per acre. Not at all bad. His cherries were a good crop and sold at the rate of eight cents a pound for the Royal Annes, while many growers received a scant four or five cents for the same variety.

Besides fruit, Mr. Syverson grows some kinds of vegetables. These he usually has contracted at the Cannery. Last year his squash brought him $8.50 a ton and this year he is expecting to get $7.50. He also has about two acres of beans from which he expects to receive a neat little sum.

Races and stunt contests had been arranged for the adults and children and were participated in by practically everyone present.

At the business session it was decided to discontinue the meetings until September.
