Play Time Is "Hay Time" for Big Business Boys;
Best Ideas Are Conceived Away From Daily Grind

The value of playtime as an antidote to the monotony of the daily grind is recognized as it is today. "There's a time for work and a time for play" is no longer merely a nursery rhyme. It has been adopted as a creed for grownups, and it is observed by no group more resolutely than by the captains of industry who direct America's great financial and business organizations.
Industrial heads and executives generally are coming to regard their periods of relaxation and recreation as in fact the most profitable. Fresh ideas, new initiatives, revived enthusiasm and vigor that are immediately reflected in increased efficiency, are achieved more effectively by well-spaced periods of play than by unbroken work and sustained application.
Barley Schwab, king of steel, so divides his job by virtue of frequent and strenuous rounds of golf, besides a horse and goes for a ride where no scent of gasoline can reach him. Henry Ford, auto autocrat, goes skating or joins in a round of old-time dancing. A. Atwater Kent, radio chief and prince of broadcasters, leaves the air for the water and sails one of his fleet of speedboats. Those octogenarian patriarchs of finance and industry, George F. Baker and John D. sr., swear by golf, despite the fact that their years almost equal their scores.
This growing acceptance of outdoor sport and recreation as a necessary adjunct to a busy business life is resulting in the development of a new type of resort where quiet and restful surroundings are supplemented with facilities for golf, riding, tennis, swimming and similar pleasures.
One of the first men to recognize this trend and to encourage it was former U. S. Senator Taggart of Indiana. Being a good business man himself, as well as a politician, Taggart has developed his big hotel resort at French Lick, Ind., particularly the recreation needs and demands of business men.
The result has proven his perspicacity, for French Lick has become one of the most popular resorts in the whole country, notwithstanding it is neither on a mountain top nor by the seashore. It does offer, however, the bracing exhilarating air of the rolling southern Indiana hill country, two fine golf courses, miles upon miles of shaded bridle paths, footpaths for hikers, tennis and swimming for the strenuous, and relief from the motley crowds that throng the average shore or near-city resort. Even Gov. Al Smith, dearly as he loves the sidewalks of New York, goes to French Lick when he wants a real rest.
While Taggart's resort is perhaps the outstanding example of the specialized rest-and-recreation-retreat developed for leaders in business and industry, the success of others conceived along similar lines proves that there is a very distinct and growing demand for just that sort of play place.

Who Was Swedenborg?

Emanuel Swedenborg, the son of a bishop, was the great Swedish scientist, philosopher and theologian, whose vast range covered Emerson to 1772 how the maddest of scholars. Dr. Parkees Cadman recently named him the Universal Genius. Officially connected, by appointment of the King, with the great mining industry of Sweden, he mastered all the sciences of his time, and wrote the most useful books on metallurgy, minerals, geology, astronomy, and the human brain.
His life search was for the human soul. How his spiritual senses were opened, after he was 53 years of age, that he might reveal the human soul, the life after death, and the Bible itself, may be read in the above named, uplifting, useful books.
