The Ward of Robbers' Roost

By Crittenden Marriott.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginia, an actor, serves mad, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter.

Then, abruptly, to Fair's delight, Barker sent him word of some Mexicans who wanted him to run a shipment of rifles and ammunition across the line into Mexico and take back in payment a shipment of whisky. The transaction would be enormously profitable to both parties; and Fair jumped at it, though ordinarily he would have considered it rather below his dignity—something like "taking candy from kids"—and all that.

Easy as it was, however, it would get Wade away from camp—he decided at once to put Wade in charge of the expedition—for a day or two at least; and it would restore the morale of some of the men. It did not occur to him that it would especially interest Stella.

But it did. Stella had been finding the suspense of waiting for Green any thing but pleasant; once she had decided to go East, she wanted to go right away. And now that the chance offered for one more night ride (undoubtedly the last that she could hope to see) she made up her mind to go, willy nilly.

The ethics of the expedition did not trouble her at all; in fact, it did not even occur to her that any question of ethics was involved. The only thing that troubled her was in regard to Fair. She knew that he would object to her going; and, though she was sure that she could persuade him to let her go, she shrank from the necessity. Why not just go and let him find out later? Really, there was no risk to her; nobody had ever hurt her; therefore nobody ever would. Her arguments were those of reckless youth the world over.

She could not guess that Wade had noticed how she was moping, and that he and Barker had between them hatched up a scheme for the purpose of getting her out of the Roost and safely away without Fair's knowledge.

To make assurance doubly sure, Wade applied a prod during the three or four days that passed while Wade and his men waited for the word from Barker that the rifles had reached Barker's place (known as the J/B ranch) and were ready to be started for the border. At Wade's orders Sunday of his friends dropped remarks in Stella's hearing in regard to thrilling adventures that were likely to happen on the trip, knowing well that the promise of adventure was the bait at which she would most eagerly snap.

The results appeared when the word from Barker came, and Wade and his chosen ten met in the corral in the early dawn to saddle their horses for an immediate start; for at that moment Stella slipped to Wade's side.

"Bill," she pleaded, "can't you take me with you?"

Bill looked at her and sniffed. "We ain't takin' no ladies on this trip," he answered.

"Ladies?" Stella blazed in sudden fury. "Who are you calling ladies?"

"You! Leastways, that's what Fair thinks. I guess he wants you to stay at home and learn to sew."

"Sew! Me?"

"Sure. What else? That's what girls do."

"I'm not a girl. I'm a boy!" Stella's words were bold, but most unlovely. Tears lay very close behind her eyes. "Not by a damn sight you ain't," said Wade. "You're a girl, and you ain't got no right to swell around in a boy's clothes. You're a girl, and you ain't got no right to make a girl into a boy. This trip's likely to be excitin'; and when it comes right down to trouble a boy's worth three girls."

The tears welled into Stella's eyes but she winked them back. "Not three girls like me," she protested.

Bill snatched at the psychological moment. "Well, maybe worth only two girls like you," he chuckled. "Stella, Bob, I'd like to take you. But I can't risk it. Fair'd kill me if any thing happened to you. He would so."

"Nothing's going to happen to me. Please, Bill."

"No, I can't—Oh, shucks! (You know that little Charley Harris is sick?)"

"No," Stella did not see the con- cession; but her tones were breath- less.

"Well, he is. He's too sick to go with us today. I was just goin' to pick somebody for his place. But I ain't told Fair about it. An', of course, it'll still be pretty dark when we report as we go out."

"Oh! Take me along in Charley's place."

"Nix. Not on your life. I ain't dis- obeyin' orders none. Course if somebody came along in Charley's place without my knowin' it I couldn't well be expected to send him back after we got fifty miles away."

NEW DRAPERIES for A FEW CENTS

All of us realize nowadays how bright-colored draperies seem to invite people in, and how warm touches of color in spreads, cushions and runners help to make us love our own surroundings.

No woman need deny herself these touches of cheer, because they can easily be had at the expense of a few cents and a little planning. Curtains that are faded or drab in color can be made bright and pleasing with a package or so of Diamond Dyes. Then spreads, covers, runners, etc., can be tinted or dyed to match. Anyone can do it. Tinting with Diamond Dyes is as easy as bluing, and dyeing takes just a little more time. Brilliant new colors appear like magic, right over the old, faded colors. Diamond dyes give true, fadeless colors. They are the kind of dyes used when the cloth was made. Only Diamond Dyes produce perfect results. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new book "Color Craft" gives hundreds of dollar-saving suggestions for beautifying your home and clothes. Sixty-four pages, fully illus- trated in colors. It's FREE. Just write Mae Martin, Home Service De- partment, Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

Largest Rose Garden Owned by King Boris

King Boris, the bachelor king of Bulgaria, who has just paid a private visit to King George at Balmora, has royal rights over the biggest rose garden in the world. It is about 40 miles long and 10 broad. The peasants of nearly 200 villages cultivate it. Their women get up before dawn to strip it. When a gentle breeze blows they say that its scent penetrates far beyond the Thracian plain in which it is situated.

It is this garden which yields the world-famous attar of roses, that luscious perfume which, in olden times, Persian shahs commanded should be used exclusively in their harems. It is said that this even today in India is offered to wedding guests on a little twisted cotton at the end of a short stick.

Attar of roses has long been the costliest perfume put on the market. During the war it ran up to $50 per ounce, and at present is round about $15.

The Bulgarian rose grower who does his own distilling does not get anything like such prices.

Indian Soldiers

A full-blooded Indian detachment of the United States army, consisting of 16 privates, two corporals and a sergeant, is stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. These Indians lead as far as possible the life as led by their ancestors, living in tents, cooking at campfires and hunting for some of their food instead of drawing it all from the quartermaster. Among the names are Chow Big, Charles Boes and Shew Riley.

Gas Can Has Credentials

George Niedner, a young college student, arrived in Washington, after getting lifts from San Bernardino, Calif., with the aid of a gasoline can. Flagg motorists with the can and having them pick him up on the assumption he was a fellow driver in distress, the drivers would usually laugh when they found the gas container was only the wanderer's suitcase filled with clothing and continue to carry him on his way.

Took Eagle on Hook

The season's best fish story isn't about fish. John H. Pitts, Alabama Polytechnic Institute football coach, cast his line and a big bald eagle, also fishing, nabbed it in midair. The fish hook caught the eagle and Pitts landed him. The bird, measuring five feet four inches from wing tip to wing tip, was presented to the institute's zoology department.

Men of the Trees

An organization started six years ago by an Englishman among African tribesmen in the highlands of Kenya, with the object of encouraging the natives to replant denuded areas, has extended the scope of its operation and is now seeking to educate public opinion throughout the British empire in forestry and to instill love of trees into all sections of the community. To this organization has been given the appropriate title of "The Men of the Trees."

Small Girl Knew All About Wife of Noah

The kindergarten teacher was telling her group the story of Noah and the ark. Suddenly little Isabel waved her hand wildly.

"I know somebodies else," she announced triumphantly. "Noah's wife could ride a horse!"

The teacher was for the moment completely nonplused, and couldn't just then remember whether those were prehistoric days or not. To gain time, she asked:

"How do you know she could, Isa- bel?"

"Cause I saw the picture and she was ridin' a white horse. An' I know her name, too."

Again the teacher was not sure whether or not the Bible mentioned Mrs. Noah.

Buck Paid Board Bill With Set of Antlers

Superintendent J. H. Eakin of Glacier National park is authority for one of the most striking instances of wild animal gratitude recorded in natural history. He relates:

"A buck deer with especially fine antlers has been a great favorite at headquarters this winter, and several people expressed a desire for his horns when they were shed, which invariably happens around January.

"One morning while feeding this buck on her back porch, a woman re- siding at administrative headquarters was astonished to see him rub his horns on the wall until they fell to the floor. As she fed him more often than any other person, she believes it was his way of showing gratitude."

The Visitor

"We understand that a party of friends came to your house last night to help you celebrate your birthday," said the able editor of the Torch of Liberty. "How did the affair go off?"

"Durned if I know!" replied Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "We went away during the afternoon and took the children along. I crawled into bed at sunset, and when a hoarse ariz outside I just turned over and went to sleep. I loved it might be a mess of Ku Klux come to celebrate something, I didn't know what."

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby—Babies Have Nerves

By RUTH BRITTAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the over-stimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "up-sets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its over-whelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.
