BANKERS HELP OUT The Oklahoma Bankers Association for the past twelve years has financed through its five groups ten scholarships in the A. & M. College at Stillwater. The winners are chosen by the Extension Department of the college on the merits of the club work done by the boys and girls over a certain period of time. The groups of the association finance the first year of the winner's college work.

The teacher in the public schools today, whose mission is the training of boys and girls for participation in democracy, is facing greater difficulties than in any other period of our nation's history. The problems of today challenge constructive democracy: are vastly different from those of the early days of the New World. We are prone to worship the past as the great day for American democracy. We think of the New England town meeting as the ideal democratic accomplishment. We sigh as we compare with it the inefficiency of city government of today.

But the comparison is unfair. I leave out of account the tremendous difference in the nature of the problems to be solved. The New England town meeting was confronted with such problems as the location of a town well, the building of a schoolhouse or its repair, the fixing of the salary of the school teacher, or the maintenance of the highway.

With the Industrial Revolution, however, came a new set of problems, gigantic in size and complicated in nature. The factory system with its dangerous machinery created tremendous cities out of rural communities. The public utilities, with their financial power and political control threatened to wrest them from autocratic power, seemed to spring up overnight. The industrial city came, with its problems of moral diseases, sanitation and engineering projects, and challenged the deepest learning and the most constructive statesmanship that the nation could produce. In these facts the careful observer will find little basis for the pessimistic worship of the past, and ample challenge to the dynamic Americanism of the future.

The new problems of the day demand more than the casual study of the patriot; they demand technical research, infinite patience, and a capacity for sustained, patriotic interest. The citizens of today are called upon to grapple with the vexing problems of water supply, involving tremendous engineering feats; they are to solve complex questions of sanitation and public hygiene based upon the learning of technical science; they have to adjust innumerable conflicts between the interests of the public and private enterprise in public utilities and public service; they must protect the health and limb of the employees against all manner of disease and accident without unduly impeding the processes of production; they must attack the mighty struggle between labor and capital, protecting the interest of the public, with impartial justice to either side.

These problems can not be solved by momentary appeals to patriotic fervor. They are not amenable to solution by the application of good judgment and common sense alone. They require the patient research of the scholar and the technical efficiency of the expert. Back of these there must lie the eternal vigilance of the public, whose sustained interest will stimulate the fidelity and efforts of its servants, and whose ultimate judgment upon the results achieved must afford a rational and enlightened system of rewards or punishments for official effort.
