Mile-Deep Diving

Dr. William Beebe, famous ichthylogist of the American Museum of Natural History, recently told of a new diving device which would enable one to descend a mile below the surface of the sea. It consists of a large steel cylinder, built to withstand a pressure of five tons to the square inch. Water pressure at the depth of one mile is about one ton to the square inch, so that the device would give its users a maximum margin of safety.
